

FIRE!!!

DEVOTED TO YOUNGER NEGRO ARTISTS

Read—

Some Southern Snapshots

by
GEORGE S. SCHUYLER in the December issue of
NEW MASSES

In this article Mr. Schuyler, a Negro writer, gives short sketches of Negro-white incidents in various Southern states. Negro boys and girls, men and women, insulted, arrested, hounded out of town, beaten, molested, and killed for imaginary, or at the most, ridiculously small and superficial acts. New details of the same old stories.

See the November and December issues of
NEW MASSES
for our Special Christmas Book Offers
25 CENTS A COPY

Read This Off and Mail

NEW MASSES,
39 West Eighth Street, New York
Enclosed find { $1.00 } for a { year's } subscription to the New Masses;
                  { $1.00 } for a { 6 months' }

Name _____
Address _____

Please send sample copies to:

1. Name _____
Address _____
2. Name _____
Address _____

Foreword

FIRE . . . flaming, burning, searing, and penetrating far beneath the superficial items of the flesh to boil the sluggish blood.

FIRE . . . a cry of conquest in the night, warning those who sleep and revitalizing those who linger in the quiet places dozing.

FIRE . . . melting steel and iron bars, poking livid tongues between stone apertures and burning wooden opposition with a cackling chuckle of contempt.

FIRE . . . weaving vivid, hot designs upon an ebon bordered loom and satisfying pagan thirst for beauty undadorned . . . the flesh is sweet and real . . . the soul an inward flush of fire . . . Beauty? . . . flesh on fire—on fire in the furnace of life blazing . . .

"E-y-ah,
E-y-ah, Lawd,
E-y-ah gonna burn ma soul!"

FIRE!

A Quarterly Devoted to the Younger Negro Artists

*Wishes to Thank the Following Persons
Who Acted as Patrons
For the First Issue*

MAURINE BOAT, Minneapolis, Minn.
 NEILIE R. BRIGG, Philadelphia, Pa.
 ARTHUR HURF FAUSER, Philadelphia, Pa.
 DOROTHY HUNT HARRIS, New York City
 ARTHUR P. MOON, Harrisburg, Pa.
 DOROTHY R. PETERSON, Brooklyn, N. Y.
 MR. AND MRS. JOHN PETERSON, New York City
 E. B. TAYLOR, Baltimore, Md.
 CARL VAN VECHTEN, New York City

Being a non-commercial product interested only in the arts, it is necessary that we make some appeal for aid from interested friends. For the second issue of FIRE we would appreciate having fifty people subscribe ten dollars each, and fifty more to subscribe five dollars each.

We make no eloquent or rhetorical plea. FIRE speaks for itself.

Gratefully,
THE BOARD OF EDITORS.

FIRE!!

A Quarterly Devoted to the Younger Negro Artists

*Premier Issue Edited by
WALLACE THURMAN*

In Association With

Langston Hughes      Zora Neale Hurston
 Gwendolyn Bennett      Aaron Douglas
 Richard Bruce      John Davis

Table of Contents

COVER DESIGNS .....	Aron Douglas
FOREWORD .....	Richard Bruce
DRAWING .....	Wallace Thurman
COMPLIA THE CREQUE, A Harlem Sketch.....	Zora Neale Hurston
COLOR STRUCTURE, A Play in Four Scenes.....	A Section of Poetry
FLAME FROM THE DARK TOWER.....	Helene Johnson
	Edward Stibera
	Waring Cuny
	Arna Bontemps
	Langston Hughes
	Lewis Alexander
DRAWING .....	Richard Bruce
WIDDING DAY, A Story.....	Gwendolyn Bennett
THREE DRAWINGS .....	Aron Douglas
SMOKE, LILIES AND JADE, A Novel, Part I.....	Richard Bruce
SWEAT, A Story.....	Zora Neale Hurston
INTELLIGENTSIA, An Essay.....	Arthur Huff Fauset
FIRE BURNS, Editorial Comment.....	Wallace Thurman
INCIDENTAL ART DECORATIONS.....	Aron Douglas

Volume One

Number One

EDITORIAL OFFICES

314 West 138th Street, New York City

Price $1.00 per copy

Issued Quarterly

FIRE!!

DEVOTED TO YOUNGER NEGRO ART/UT,

Cordelia the Crude

Physically, if not mentally, Cordelia was a potential prostitute, meaning that although she had not yet realized the moral import of her wanton promiscuity nor become mercenary, she had, nevertheless, become quite blasé and bountiful in the matter of bestowing sexual favors upon persuasive and likely young men. Yet, despite her seeming lack of discrimination, Cordelia was quite particular about the type of male to whom she submitted, for numbers do not necessarily denote a lack of taste, and Cordelia had discovered after several months of active observation that one could find the qualities one admires or reacts positively to in a varied hodge-podge of outwardly different individuals.

The scene of Cordelia's activities was The Roosevelt Motion Picture Theatre on Seventh Avenue near 145th Street. Thrice weekly the program changed, and thrice weekly Cordelia would plunk down the necessary twenty-five cents evening admission fee, and saunter gaily into the foul-smelling depths of her favorite cinema shrine. The Roosevelt Theatre presented all of the latest pictures, also, twice weekly, treated its audiences to a vaudeville bill, then too, one could always have the most delightful physical contacts . . . ham . . .

Cordelia had not consciously chosen this locale nor had there been any conscious effort upon her part to take advantage of the extra opportunities afforded for physical pleasure. It had just happened that the Roosevelt Theatre was more close to her home than any other neighborhood picture palace, and it had also just happened that Cordelia had become almost immediately inhaled into the ways of a Harlem theatre chippie soon after her discovery of the theatre itself.

It is the custom of certain men and boys who frequent these places to idle up and down the aisle until some female is seen sitting alone, to slouch down into a seat beside her, to touch her foot or else press her leg in such a way that it can be construed as accidental if necessary, and then, if the female is wise or else shows signs of willingness to become wise, to make more obvious approaches until, if successful, the approached female will soon be chatting with her balter about the picture being shown, jolling in his arms, and helping to formulate plans for an after-theatre rendezvous. Cordelia had, you see, shown a willingness to become wise upon her second visit to The Roosevelt. In a short while she had even learned how to squelch the bloated, lewd faced Jews and eager middle aged Negroes who might approach as well as how to inveigle the likeable little yellow or brown half men, embryo avenue sweetbacks, with their well modeled heads, stickily plastered hair, flaming cravats, silken or broadcloth shirts, dirty underwear, low cut vests, form fitting coats, bell-bottom trousers and shiny shoes with metal cornered heels clicking with a brave, brazen rhythm upon the bare concrete floor as their owners angled and searched for prey.

Cordelia, sixteen years old, markedly mature, was an undisciplined, half literate product of rustic South Carolina, and had come to Harlem very much against her will with her parents and her six brothers and sisters. Against her will because she had not been at all anxious to leave the lachrymical life of the little corn pone settlement where she had been born, to go trooping into the unknown vastness of New York, for she had been in love, passionately in love with one John Stokes who raised pigs, and who, like his father before him, found the raising of pigs so profitable that he could not even consider leaving Lintonville. Cordelia had blankly informed her parents that she would not go with them when they decided to be lured to New York by an older son who had remained there after the demobilization of the war time troops. She had even threatened to run away with John until they should be gone, but of course John could not leave his pigs, and John's mother was not very keen on having Cordelia for a daughter-in-law—those Joneses have had mixed blood in 'em—so Cordelia had had to join the Gotham bound caravan and leave her lover to his succulent porkers.

However, the mere moving to Harlem had not doused the rebellious flame. Upon arriving Cordelia had not only refused to go to school and refused to hold even the most easily held job, but had also victoriously defied her harassed parents so frequently when it came to matters of discipline that she soon found herself with a mesmerizing lack of home retreat, for the stress of trying to maintain themselves and their family in the new environment was far too much of a task for Mr. and Mrs. Jones to attend to factually and at the same time try to control a recalcitrant child. So, when Cordelia had refused either to work or to attend school, Mrs. Jones herself had gone out for day's work, leaving Cordelia at home to take care of their five room railroad flat, the front room of which was rented out to a couple "living together," and to see that the younger children, all of whom were of school age, made their four trips daily between home and the nearby public school—as well as see that they had their greasy, if slim, food rations and an occasional change of clothing. Thus Cordelia's days were full—and so were her nights. The only difference being that the days belonged to the folks at home while the nights (since the folks were too tired or too sleepy to know or care when she came in or went out) belonged to her and to—well—whosoever will, let them come.

Cordelia had been playing this hectic, entrancing game for six months and was widely known among a certain group of young men and girls on the avenue as a fast class chienne when she and I happened to enter the theatre simultaneously. She had clumped down the aisle before me, her open gaitshoes swishing noisily, her two arms busy wringing themselves free from the torn sleeves lining of a shoddy imitation fur coat that one of her mother's wash clients had sent to her. She was of medium height and build, with overly developed legs and bust, and had a clear, keen light brown complexion. Her tousled, too naturally bobbed hair, matted by the removing of a tight, black turban was of an undecided nature, i. e., it was undecided whether to be kinky or to be kind, and her body, as she stammered along in the partial light had such a conscious sway of invitation that unthinkingly I followed, slid into the same row of seats and sat down beside her.

Naturally she had noticed my pursuit, and thinking that I was eager to play the game, let me know immediately that she was wise, and not the least bit averse to spooning with me during the evening's performance. Interested and I might as well confess, intrigued physically, I too became wise, and played up to her with all the fervor, or so I thought, of an old timer, but Cordelia soon remarked that I was different from most of des sticks, and when pressed for an explanation brazenly told me in a slightly scandalized and patronizing tone that I had not even felt her legs. . . .

At one o'clock in the morning we strolled through the snowy bleakness of one hundred and forty-fourth street between Lenox and Fifth Avenues to the walk-up tenement flat in which she lived, and after stamping the snow from our feet, pushed through the double outside doors, and followed the dismal hallway to the rear of the building where we began the tedious climbing of the creaked, creaking, inconveniently narrow stairway. Cordelia had informed me earlier in the evening that she lived on the top floor—four flights up east side rear—and on our way we rested at each floor and at each half way landing, rested long enough to mingle the snowy dampness of our respective coats, and to hug clumsily while our lips met in an animal kiss.

Finally only another half flight remained, and instead of proceeding as was usual after our anxious demonstration I abruptly drew away from her, opened my overcoat, plunged my hand into my pants pocket, and drew out two crumpled one dollar bills which I handed to her, and then, while she stared at me foolishly, I muttered good-night, confusedly pecked her on her cold brown cheek, and darted down into the creaking darkness.

Six months later I was taking two friends of mine, lately from the provinces, to a Saturday night house-rant party in a well known whore house on one hundred and thirty-fourth street near Lenox Avenue. The place as we entered seemed to be a chaotic riot of raucous noise and clashing color all rhythmically merging in the red, smoke filled room. And there I saw Cordelia savagely careening in a drunken abortion of the Charleston and surrounded by a perspiring circle of handclapping enthusiasts. Finally fatigued, she whirled into an abrupt finish, and stopped so that she stared directly into my face, but being dizzy from the calisthenic turns and the cauterizing liquor she doubted that her eyes recognized someone out of the past, and, visibly trying to sober herself, languidly began to dance a slow drag with a lean hipped, pimply faced yellow man who had walked between her and me. At last he released her, and seeing that she was about to leave the room I rushed forward calling Cordelia?—as if I was not yet sure who it was. Stopping in the doorway, she turned to see who had called, and finally recognizing me said simply, without the least trace of emotion,—Lo Kid. . . .

And without another word turned her back and walked into the hall to where she joined four girls standing there. Still eager to speak, I followed and heard one of the girls ask: Who's the dirty kid? . . .

And Cordelia answered: The guy who gimme ma'fis' two bucks. . . .

WALLACE THURMAN.

Color Struck

A Play in Four Scenes

Time: Twenty years ago and present. Place: A Southern City.

PERSONS

- JOHN - - - - - A light brown-skinned man
- EMMAINE - - - - - A black woman
- WESLEY - - - - - A boy who plays an accordion
- EMMAINE'S DAUGHTER - - - - - A very white girl
- EFFIE - - - - - A mulatto girl
- A RAILWAY CONDUCTOR - - - - - A Doctor
- Several who play mouth organs, guitars, banjos, Dancers, passengers, etc.

Setting—Early night. The inside of a "Jim Crow" railway coach. The car is parallel to the footlights. The seats on the down stage side of the coach are omitted. There are the luggage racks above the seats. The windows are all open. They are exits in each end of the car—right and left.

Access—Before the curtain goes up there is the sound of a locomotive whistling and a rattling engine load laughter, many people speaking at once, good-natured shirts, strumming of stringed instruments, etc. The ascending carriage discovers a happy lot of Negroes boarding the train, dressed in the coarse, ready bet of soap. They are mostly in couples—each couple bearing a covered over market basket which the men hurriedly deposit in the racks as they scramble for seats. There is a titter friendly pushing and shoving. One pair just miss a seat three times, meet in the enjoyment of the crowd. Many "plug" silk hats are in evidence, also sunflowers in button holes. The women are obviously dressed in the manner of the time, and quite conscious of their finery. A few seats remain unoccupied.

Enter Effie (left) above, with a basket. ONE OF THE MEN (standing, lifting his "plug" in a grand manner). Howdy do, Miss Effie, you 'se lookin' jes lak a rose.

(Effie blushes and is confused. She looks up and down for a seat.) Fack is, if you wuzn't walkin' behind her and the others laugh). Looka here, where's Sam at?

EFFIE (tossing her head haughtily). I don't know an' I don't keer.

THE MAN (visibly relieved). Then lemme scootch you to a seat. (He takes her basket and leads her to a seat center of the car, puts the basket in the rack and seats himself beside her with his hat at a rakish angle.)

MAN (sliding his arm along the back of the seat). How come Sam ain't heah—y'll on a bust?

EFFIE (angrily). A man dat don't buy me nothin tuh put in mah basket, ain't goin' wid her tuh no cake walk. (The hand on the seat touches her shoulder and she thrusts it away.) Take yo' arms from 'round me, Dinky! Gwan hug yo' Adal!

MAN (in mock indignation). Do you think I'd look at Ada when Ah got a chance tuh be wid you? Ah always wuz sweet on you, but you let ole Moulthead Sam cut me out.

ANOTHER MAN (with head out of the window). Just look at de darkies coming! (With head inside coach.) Hey, Dinky! Heah come Ada wid a great big basket.

(Dinky jumps up from beside Effie and rushes to exit right. In a moment they re-enter and take a seat near entrance. Everyone in coach laughs.)

Dinky's girl turns and calls back to Effie.)

GIRL. Where's Sam, Effie?

EFFIE. Lawd knows, Ada.

GIRL. Lawd a mussy! Who you goin'er walk de cake wid?

EFFIE. Nobody, Ah reckon. John and Emma goin'er win it nobow. They's the bestest cake-walkers in dis state.

ADA. Youse better than Emma any day in de week. Cose Sam can't walk lake John. (She stands up and scans the coach.) Looka heah, an't John an' Emma going? They ain't on heah!

(The locomotive bell begins to ring.)

EFFIE. Mah Gawd, s pose dey got left!

MAM (with head out of window). Heah they come, nip and tuck—whoee! They se gonna make rit! (He waves excitedly.) Come on, Jawnt! (Everybody crowds the windows, encouraging them by gesture and calls. As the whistle blows twice, and the train begins to move, they enter painting and laughing at left. The only seat left is the one directly in front of Effie.)

DINKEY (standing). Don't y'all skeer us no mo' lake dat! There couldn't be no cake walk thout y'all. Dem shad-moaf St. Augustine coons would win dat cake and we would have tuh kill 'em all bodaciously.

JOHN. It was Emmaline nearly made us get left. She says I wuz smiling at Effie on the street car and she had to get off and wait for another one.

EMMA (removing the hatpins from her hat, turns furiously upon him). You wuz grinning at her and she wuz grinning back jes like a ole chesey cat!

JOHN (positively). I wuzn't.

EMMA (about to place her hat in rack). You wuz. I seen you looking jes like a possum.

JOHN. I wuzn't. I never gits a chance tuh smile at nobody—you won't let me.

EMMA. Jes the same every time you sees a yaller face, you takes a chance. (They sit down in general silence for a minute.)

DINKEY. Aha, he's all sample de basket. I bet you got huckleberry pie.

ABA. No I aint! I got peach an' tater pies, but we aint gonna teach a thing tell we gits tuh de hall.

DINKEY (muck alarm). Naw, don't do dat! It's all right tuh save the fried chicken, but pies is a-ways et on trains.

ABA. Aw shet up! (He struggles with her for a kite. She slaps him but finally yields.)

JOHN (looking behind him). Hellow, Effie, wheres Sam?

EFFIE. Deed, I don't know.

JOHN. Y'all on a bust?

EMMA. None ah yo' business, you got enough tuh mind yo' own self. Turn round!

(She puts up a pointing mouth and he matches a kite. She laughs just as he kisses her again and there is a resounding smack which causes the crowd to laugh. And cries of "Oh you kid!" "Salty dog!"

(Enter conductor left calling tickets cheerfully and laughing in the general merriment.)

CONDUCTOR. I hope somebody from Jacksonville wins this cake.

JOHN. You live in the "Big Jack?"

CONDUCTOR. Sure do. And I wanna taste a piece of that cake on the way back tonight.

JOHN. Jes rest easy—they Augustiners aint gonna smell it. (Turns to Emma.) Is they, baby?

EMMA. Not if Ah kin help it.

Somebody with a guitar sings: "Ho, babe, mah honey tant no lie!"

(The conductor takes up tickets, passes on and exits right.)

WESLEY. Look heah, you cake walkers—y'all oughter git up and limber up yo' joints. I heard them folks over to St. Augustine been oiling up wid goose-grease, and over to Ocala they been rubbing down in snake oil.

A WOMAN'S VOICE. You better shut up, Wesley, you just joined de church last month. Somebody's going to tell the pastor on you.

WESLEY. Tell it, tell it, take it up and smell it. Come on out you John and Emma and Effie, and limber up.

JOHN. Naw, we don't wanna do our walking steps—nobody won't wanna see them when we step out at the hall. But we kin do something else just to warm ourselves up.

(Wesley begins to play "Goo Goo Eyes" on his accordion, the other instruments come in one by one and John and Emma step into the aisle and "parade" up and down the aisle—Emma holding up her skirt, showing the lace on her petticoats. They two-step back to their seat amid much applause.)

WESLEY. Come on out, Effie! Sam aint heah so you got to hold up his side too. Step on out.

(There is a murmur of applause as she steps into the aisle. Wesley strikes up "I'm goin'er live any-how till I die." It is played quite spiritedly as Effie swings into the pas-me-la—)

WESLEY (in ecstasy). Hot stuff I reckon! Hot stuff I reckon! (The musicians are stamping.

Great enthusiasm. Some clap time with hands and feet. She hurts herself into a modified Hooshy Kooshy, and finishes up with an ecstatic yell.)

There is a babble of talk and laughter and excitement.

JOHN (applauding loudly). If dat Effie cant't step nobody can.

EMMA. Course you'd say so cause it's her. Everything she do is pretty to you.

JOHN (rearing her). Now don't say that, Honey. Dancing is dancing no matter who is doing it. But nobody can hold a candle to you in nothing.

(Some men are heard tanning up—getting pitch to sing. Four of them crowd together in one seat and begin the chorus of "Daisies Hout' 'Till.")

JOHN (kisses her). Emma, what makes you always picking a fuss with me over some yaller girl.

What makes you so jealous, nobow? I don't do nothing.

(She clings to him, but he turns slightly away. The train whistle blows, there is a stacking of speed. Passengers begin to take down baskets from their racks.)

EMMA. John! John, don't you want me to love you, honey?

JOHN (turns and kisses her slowly). Yes, I want you to love me, you know I do. But I don't like to be accused of ever light colored girl in the world. It hurts my feeling. I don't want to be jealous like you are.

(Enter at right Conductor, crying "St. Augustine, St. Augustine." He exits left. The crowd has congregated at the two exits, pushing good-naturedly and joking. All except John and Emma. They are still seated with their arms about each other.)

EMMA (softly). Then you don't want my love, John, cause I can't help mahself from being jealous. I loves you so hard, John, and jealous love is the only kind I got.

(John kisses her very fondly.)

EMMA. Just for myself alone is the only way I knows how to love.

(They are standing in the aisle with their arms about each other as the curtain falls.)

SCENE II

SETTING.—A scabber-board hall. A large room with the joints bare. The place has been divided by a curtain of sheet stretched and a rope across from left to right. From behind the curtain there are occasional sounds of laughter, a note or two on a stringed instrument or accordion. General stir. That is the dance hall. The front is the ante-room where the refreshments are being served. A "bank" seat runs all around the hall, along the walls. The lights are kerosene lamps with reflectors. They are faced to the wall. The lunch-baskets are under the seat. There is a table on either side upstage with a sashon behind each. At one, ice cream is sold, at the other, roasted peanuts and large red-and-white sticks of peppermint candy. People come in by twos and threes, laughing, joking, horse-play, genially flowered dresses, small suits, bulging hips and butts, hats worn far back on the head, etc. People from Ocala greet others from Paduka, Jacksonville, St. Augustine, etc. Some find seats in the ante-room, others pass on into the main hall. Enter the Jacksonville delegation, laughing, pushing proudly.

DINKEY. Here we is, folks—here we is. Goin'er take dat cake on back tuh Jacksonville where it belongs.

MAM. Gwan! What wid you mullet-headed Jacksonville Coons know what to do wid a cake.

It's goin'er stay right here in Augustine where de good cake walkers grow.

DINKEY. Aint no "Walkers" never walked till John and Emmaline prance out—you mighty come a tootin'.

Great laughing and jostling as more people come in. John and Emma are encouraged, urged on to win.

EMMA. Let's we git a seat, John, and set down.

JOHN. Sho will—nice one right over there. (They push over to wall seat, place basket underneath, and sit. Newcomers shake hands with them and urge them on to win.)

(Enter Joe Clarke and a small group. He is a rotund, expansive man with a liberal watch chain and chain.)

Dinkey (slipping Clarke on the back). If you don't go 'way from here! Lawdy, if it aint Joe.

CLARKE (jovially). Ah thought you had done forgot us people in Eatonville since you been living up here in Jacksonville.

DINKEY. Course Ah aint. (Turning.) Look a heah folks! Joe Clarke oughta be made chairman uh dis meetin'—Ah mean Past Great-Grand Master of Cerenomics, him being the oldest mayor of de onliest colored town in de state.

GENERAL CHORUS. Yeah, let him be—thass fine, etc.

DINKEY (setting his hat at a new angle and throwing out his chest). And Ah'll scorch him to de platform. Ament!

(Sprinkling of laughter as Joe Clarke is escorted into next room by Dinky.)

(The musicians are arriving one by one during this time. A guitar, accordion, mouth organ, banjo, etc. Soon there is a rapping for order heard inside and the voice of Joe Clarke.)

JOE CLARKE. Git yo' partners one an' all for de gram' march! Git yo' partners, gentlemens!

A MAN (drawing basket from under bench). Lets we all eat first.

(John and Emma go buy ice-cream. They contently eat from each other's spoons. Old Man Lazzmore crosses to Effie and removes his hat and bows with a great flourish.)

LAZZMORE. Sam ain't here tonight, is he, Effie.

EFFIE (embarrassed). Naw sah, he ain't.

LIZZ. Well, you like chicken? (Extends arm to her.) Take a wing!

(He struts her up to the table amid the laughter of the house. He wears no collar.)

JOHN (squeezes Emma's hand). You certainly is a ever loving mamma—when you ain't mad.

EMMA (smiles sheepishly). You oughtn't to make me mad then.

JOHN. Ah don't make you! You makes yo' self mad, den blame it on me. Ah keep on tellin' you Ah don't love nobody but you. Ah knows heans uh half-white girls Ah could git et Ah wanted to. But (he squeezes her hard again) Ah jus wants you! You know what they say! De darker de berry, de sweeter de taste!

EMMA (pretending to pout). Oh, you tries to run over me an' keep it under de cover, but Ah won't let you. (Both laugh.) Les' we eat our basket!

JOHN. Aight. (He pulls the basket out and she removes the table cloth. They set the basket on their knees and begin to eat fried chicken.)

MALE VOICE. Les' everybody eat—motion's done carried. (Everybody begins to open baskets. All have fried chicken. Very good humor prevails. Delicacies are scooped from one basket to the other. John and Emma offer the man next them some supper. He takes a chicken leg. Effie crosses to John and Emma with two pieces of pie on a plate.)

EFFIE. Y'll have a piece uh mah blueberry pie—it's mighty nice! (She proffers it with a timid smile to Emma who "freezes" up instantly.)

EMMA. Naw! We don't want no pie. We got cocount layer-cake.

JOHN. Ah—Ah think ah'd choose a piece uh pie, Effie. (He takes it.) W'll you set down an' have a snack wid us? (He slides over to make room.)

EFFIE (nervously). Ah, naw, Ah got to run on back to mah basket, but Ah thought maybe y'll mount want tuh taste mah pie. (She turns to go.)

JOHN. Thank you, Effie. It's mighty good, too. (He eats it. Effie crosses to her seat. Emma glares at her for a minute, then turns disgustingly away from the basket. John catches her shoulder and faces her around.)

JOHN (pleadingly). Honey, be nice. Don't act lak dat!

EMMA (jerking free). Naw, you done ruint mah appetite now, carryin on wid dat punkn-cooled ole gal.

JOHN. What kin Ah do? If you had a acted polite Ah wouldn't a had nothin' to say.

EMMA. Naw, youse jus' hog-writ ovah her cause she's half-white! No matter what Ah say, you keep carryin on wid her. Act polite? Naw Ah ain't gonna be deceitful an' bust mah gizzard tuh nobody! Let her keep her dirty ole pie ovah there where she is!

JOHN (looking around to see if they are overheard). Sh-sh! Honey, you musn't talk so loud.

EMMA (louder). Ah-ah aunt gonna bite mah tongue! If she don't like it she can lump it. Mah back is broad—(John tries to cover her mouth with his hand). She calls herself a big ciger, but I kin smoke her!

(The people are laughing and talking for the most part and pay no attention. Effie is laughing and talking to those around her and does not hear the trade. The eating is over and everyone is going behind the curtain. John and Emma put away their basket like the others, and sit glum. Voice of Master-of-ceremonies can be heard from beyond curtain announcing the post-meal contest. The contestants, mostly girls, take the floor. There is no music except the clapping of hands and the shouts of "Parse-me-lah" in time with the hand-clapping. At the end Master announces winner. Shadows seen on curtain.)

MASTER. Mathilda Clarke is winner—if she will step forward she will receive a beautiful wook fascinator. (The girl goes up and receives it with great hand-clapping and good humor.) And now since the roosters is crown foah midnight, an' most of us got to git up an' go to work tomorrow, The Great Cake Walk will begin. Ah wants de floor cleared, cause de representatives of de several cities will be announced an' we wants 'em to take de floor as their names is called. Den we wants 'em to do a gram' promenade round' de hall. An' they will then commence to walk tuh de biggest cake ever baked in dis state. Ten dozen eggs—ten pounds of flour—ten pounds of butter, and so on and so forth.

Now then—(he strikes a pose) for St. Augustine—Miss Lucy Taylor, Mr. Ned Cokes. (They step out amid applause and stand before stage.)

For Dayton—Miss Janie Bradley, Enoch Nixon

(Same business.) For Ocala—Miss Docia Boger, Mr. Oscar Clarke

(Same business.) For Palatka—Miss Maggie Lemmons, Mr. Senator Lewis

(Same business.) And for Jacksonville the most popular "walkers" Miss Emmaline Beazely, Mr. John Turner, (Tremendous applause. John rises and offers his arm grandiloquently to Emma.)

EMMA (pleadingly, and clutching his coat). John let's we all don't go in there with all them. Let's we all go on home.

JOHN (amazed). Why, Emma?

EMMA. Cause, cause all them girls is going to pulling and hauling on you, and—

JOHN (impatiently). Shucks! Come on. Don't you hear the people clapping for us and calling our names? Come on!

(He tries to pull her up—she tries to drag him back.)

Come on, Emma! Taint no sense in your acting like this. The band is playing for us. Hear 'em?

(He moves feet in a dance step.)

EMMA. Naw, John, Ah'm skeered. I loves you

—I—

(He tries to break away from her. She is holding on fiercely.)

SCENE III—Dance Hall

Emma springs to her feet and flings the curtain wide open. She stands staring at the gay scene from moonlight faintly seen through the wall and rushes into the Spanish Moss, mandarin, etc.

Dance hall decorated with palm-tree trees, and Spanish Moss—a flag or two. Orchestra consists of guitar, mandolin, banjo, accordion, church organ and drum.

MASTER (on platform). Couples take yo' places! With de music starts, gentlemen parade yo' ladies once round de hall, den de walk begins. (The music begins. Four men come out from behind the platform, bearing a huge chocolate cake. The couples are "parading" in their tracks. The men lead off a grand slam around the hall.)

MASTER. Couples to de floor! Stan' back, ladies an' gentlemen—give 'em plenty room.

(Music changes to "Wag Down in Georgia." Orchestra sings. Effie takes the arm that John offers her and they parade to the other end of the hall. She takes her place. John goes back upstage to the platform, takes off his silk hat in a graceful sweep as he bows deeply to Effie. She lifts her skirts and curtsies to the floor. Both smile broadly. They advance toward each other, meet midway, then, arm in arm, begin to "strut." John falters as he faces her, but recovers promptly and is perfection in his

JOHN. I got to go! I been practising almost a year—we done come all the way down here, I can walk the cake, Emma—we got to—I got to go in! (He looks into her face and sees her tremendous fear.) What you skeered about?

EMMA (hopelessly). You won't go it—You'll come on go home with me all by ourselves. Come on John, I can't, I just can't go in there and see all them girls—Effie hanging after you—

JOHN. I got to go to go in—(he removes her hand from his coat)—whether you come with me or not.

EMMA. Oh—then yaller wenchels! How I hate 'em! They gets everything they wants—

Voice ISSUES. We are waiting for the couple from Jacksonville—Jacksonville! Where is the couple from—

(Hearty parts the curtain and looks out.)

WESLEY. Here they is out here spooning! You all can't even hear your names called. Come on John and Emma.

JOHN. Coming. (He dashes inside. Wesley stands looking at Emma in surprise.)

WESLEY. What's the matter, Emma? You and John sparting again? (He goes back inside.)

EMMA (calmly bitter). He went and left me. If we ins sparting we done had our last one. (She stands and clenches her fists) Ah, mah God! He's in there with her—Oh, them half whites, they gets everything, they gets everything everybody else wants! The men, the jobs—everything! The whole world is got a sign on it. Wanted! Light colored.

Us blacks was made for cobble stones. (She muffles a cry and sinks limp upon the seat.)

Voice ISSUES. Miss Effie Jones will walk for Jacksonville with Mr. John Turner in place of Miss Emmaline Beazely.

style. (Seven to nine minutes to curtain.) Fervor of spectators grows until all are taking part in some way—either hand-clapping or singing the words. At curtain they have reached frenzy.)

QUICK CURTAIN

(It stays down a few seconds to indicate ending of contest and goes up again on John and Effie being declared winners by Judges.)

MASTER (on platform, with John and Effie on the floor before him). By unanimous decision the cake goes to the couple from Jacksonville! (Great enthusiasm. The cake is set down in the center of the floor and the winning couple parade around it arm in arm. John and Effie circle the cake happily and triumphantly. The other contestants, and then the entire assembly fall in behind and circle the cake, singing and clapping. The festivities continue. The Jacksonville quartet step upon the platform and sing a verse and chorus of "Daisies won't tell." Chorus of "Hurray for Jacksonville! Glory for the big town," "Hurray for Big Jack.")

A MAN (setting Emma). You're from Jacksonville, aint you? (He sculpts her around and around.) Aint you happy? Whoopee! (He releases her and she droops upon a seat. She buries her face in the moss.)

(Quartet begins on chorus again. People are departing, laughing, humming, with quartet cheering. John, the cake, and Effie being borne away in triumph.)

SCENE IV

Time—present. The interior of a one-room shack in an alley. There is a small window in the rear wall upstage left. There is an enlarged crayon drawing of a man and woman—man sitting cross-legged, woman standing with her hand on his shoulder. A center table, red cover, a low, cheap rocker, two straight chairs, a small kitchen stove at left with a wood-box beside it, a sweater-bucket on a stand close by. A hand towel and a wash basin. A shelf of dishes above this. There is an ordinary oil lamp on the center table, but it is not lighted when the curtain goes up. Some light enters through the window and falls on the woman seated in the low rocker. The door is center right, a cheap bed is against the upstage wall. Someone is on the bed but is lying so that the bed is toward the audience.

ACTORS—As the curtain rises, the woman is seen rocking to and fro in the low rocker. A dead silence except for the sound of the rocker and an occasional groan from the bed. Once a faint voice says "center" and the woman in the rocker arises and carries the tin dipper to the bed.

WOMAN. No mo' right away—Doctor says not too much. (Returns dipper to wall.—Pause.) You got right much fever—I better go git the doctor agin.

(There comes a knocking at the door and she stands still for a moment, listening. It comes again and she goes to door but does not open it.)

WOMAN. Who's that?

Voice OUTSIDE. Does Emma Brasely live here?

EMMA. Yeah—(pause)—who is it?

Voice. It's me—John Turner.

EMMA (puts hands eagerly on the fastening). John! did you say John Turner?

Voice. Yes, Emma, it's me.

(The door is opened and the man steps inside.)

EMMA. John! Your hand (she feels for it and touches it). John, fish and blood.

JOHN (laughing awkwardly). It's me alright, old girl, just as bright as a basket of chips. Make a light quick so I can see how you look. I'm crazy die happy if I didn't. Couldn't get over you—couldn't forget. Forget me, Emma?

EMMA. Naw, John. How could I?

JOHN (leans over impulsively to catch her hand). Oh, Emma, I love you so much. Strike a light honey so I can see you—see if you changed much. You was such a handsome girl!

EMMA. We don't exactly need no light, do we, John, tuh jus set an' talk?

JOHN. Yes, we do, Honey. Gwan, make a light. Ah wanna see you.

(There is a silence.)

EMMA. Bet you' write wuz some high-yaller dicky-doo.

JOHN. Naw she wasn't neither. She was jus' as much like you as Ah could get her. Make a light an' Ah'll show you her pitcher. Shucks, ah gotta look at mah old sweetheart. (He strikes a match and holds it up between their faces and they look intently at each other until it burns out.)

You aint changed none at all, Emma, jus' as pretty as a speckled pup yet.

EMMA (lighter). Go long, John! (Short pause)

'member how you useter bring me magnolias?

JOHN. Do I? Gee, you was sweet! 'Member how Ah useter pull mah necktie loose so you could tie it back for me? Emma, Ah can't see to mah soul how we lived all this time, way from one another. 'Member how you useter make out mah ears had done run down and you useter screw em up agin for me? (They laugh.)

EMMA. Yeah, Ah useter think you wuz goin' ter be mah husban' then—but you let dat ole—

JOHN. Ah aint gonna let you alibi on me lak dat. Light dat lamp! You can't look me in de eye and say no such. (He strikes another match and lights the lamp.) Course, Ah don't wanta look too bossy, but Ah blieve you got to marry me tuh git rid of me. That is, if you aint married.

EMMA. Naw, Ah aint. (She turns the lamp down.)

JOHN (looking about the room). Nor so good, Emma. But wait till you see dat little place in Phily! Got a little "Rolls-Rough," too—goin' ter teach you to drive it, too.

EMMA. Ah been havin' a hard time, John, an' Ah lost you—oh, aint nothin' been right for me! Ah aint never been happy.

(John takes both of her hands in his.)

JOHN. You goin' ter be happy now, Emma. Cause Ah'm goin' ter make you. Gee Whizz! Ah aint but forty-two and you aint forty yet—we got plenty time. (There is a groan from the bed.) Gee, what's that?

EMMA (ill at ease). Thass mah chile. She's sick. Reckon Ah better see bout her.

JOHN. You got a child? Gee, that great! Ah always wanted one, but didn't have no luck. Now we kin start off with a family. Girl or boy?

EMMA (stately). A girl. Comin' tuh see me agin soon, John?

JOHN. Comin' agin? Ah aint gone yet! We aint talked, you aint kissed me an' nothin', and you aint showed me our girl. (Another groan, more prolonged.) She must be pretty sick—let's see.

(He turns in his chair and Emma rushes over to the bed and covers the girl securely, tucking her long hair under the covers, too—before he arises. He goes over to the bed and looks down into her face. She is motionless. Turns to Emma testingly.)

Talkin' 'bout me likin' high-yallers—yo husban' musta been pretty near white.

EMMA (slowly). Ah, never wuz married, John.

JOHN. It's alright, Emma. (Kisses her warmly.) Everything is going to be O.K. (Turning back to the bed.) Our child looks pretty sick, but she's pretty. (Feels her forehead and cheek.) Think she oughter have a doctor.

EMMA. Ah done had one. Course Ah can't git no specialist an' nothin' lak dat. (She looks about the room and his gaze follows hers.) Ah aint got a whole lot lak you. Nobody don't git rich in no white-folks' kitchen, nor in de washin's. You know Ah aint no school-teacher an' nothin' lak dat. (John puts his arm about her.)

JOHN. It's all right, Emma. But our daughter is bad off—run out an' git a doctor—she needs one. Ah'd go if Ah knowed where to find one—you kin git one the quickest—hurry, Emma.

EMMA (looks from John to her daughter and back again). She'll be all right. Ah reckon, for a while. John, you love me—you really want me sho' nuff?

JOHN. Sure Ah do—think Ah'd come all de way down here for nothin'? Ah wants to marry agin.

EMMA. Soon, John?

JOHN. Real soon.

EMMA. Ah wuz jus' thinkin', mah folks is away now on a little trip—the home day after tomorrow—we could git married tomorrow.

JOHN. All right. Now run on after the doctor—we must look after our girl. Gee, she's got a fall suit of hair! Glad you didn't let her chop it off. (Looks away from bed and sees Emma standing still.)

JOHN. Emma, run on after the doctor, honey. (She goes to the bed and again tucks the long braids of hair in, which are again pouring over the side of the bed by the feverish tossing of the girl.) What's our daughter's name?

EMMA. Lou Lillian. (She returns to the rocker lazily and sits rocking jerkily. He returns to his seat and turns up the light.)

JOHN. Gee, we're going to be happy—we gointer make up for all them twenty years (another groan). Emma git up an' gwan git dat doctor. You done forgot Ah'm de boss uh dis family now—gwan, while Ah'm here to watch her whilst you're gone. Ah got to git back to mah stoppin'-place after a while.

EMMA. You go git one, John. JOHN. Whilst Ah'm blunderin' round tryin' to find one, she'll be gettin' worse. She sounds pretty bad—(takes out his wallet and hands her a bill)—get a taxi if necessary. Hurry!

EMMA (does not take the money, but tucks her arm and hair in again, and gives the girl a drink). Reckon Ah better go git a doctor. Don't want nothin' to happen to her. After you left, Ah useter have such a hurtin' in heah (touches bosom) till she come an' cased it some.

JOHN. Here, take some money and get a good doctor. There must be some good colored ones around here now.

EMMA (sorrowfully). I wouldn't let one of 'em tend my cat if I had one! But let's we don't start a fuss.

(John carries her again. When he raises his head he notices the picture on the wall and crosses over to it with her—his arm still about her.)

JOHN. Why, that's you and me!

EMMA. Yes, I never could part with that. You coming tomorrow morning, John, and we're gointer get married, aint we? Then we can talk over everything.

JOHN. Sure, but I aint gone yet. I don't see how come we can't make all our arrangements now. (Groans from bed and fidgets movement.)

Good lord, Emma, go get that doctor!

(Emma starts at the girl and the bed and strikes a hat from a nail on the wall. She prepares to go but looks from John to bed and back again. She fumbles about the table and lowers the lamp. Goes to door and opens it. John offers the wallet. She refuses it.)

EMMA. Doctor right around the corner. Guess I'll leave the door open so she can get some air. She won't need nothing while I'm gone, John. (She raises and tucks the girl in securely and rushes out, looking backward and putting the door wide open as she exits. John sits in the chair beside the table. Looks about him—shakes his head. The girl on the bed groans, "water," "so hot." John looks about him excitedly. Greets her a drink. Feels her forehead. Takes a clean handkerchief from his pocket and wets it and places it upon her forehead. She raises her hand to the cool object. Enter Emma running. When she sees John at the bed she is full of fury. She rushes over and jerks his shoulder around. They face each other.)

EMMA. I knowed it! (She strikes him.) A half white skin. (She rushes at him again. John staggers back and catches her hands.)

JOHN. Emma!

EMMA (struggles to free her hands). Let me go so I can kill you. Come sneaking in here like a pale cat!

JOHN (slowly, after a long pause). So this is the woman I've been wearing over my heart like a rose for twenty years! She so despises her own skin that she can't believe any one else could love it!

(Emma writhes to free herself.)

JOHN. Twenty years! Twenty years of adoration, of hunger, of worship! (On the verge of tears he crosses to door and exits quietly, closing the door after him.)

(Emma remains standing, looking dully about as if she is half asleep. There comes a knocking at the door. She does not step aside so that he can enter. White. She does not step aside so that he can enter.)

DOCTOR. Well, shall I come in?

EMMA (stepping aside and laughing a little). That's right, doctor, come in.

(Doctor crosses to bed with professional air. Looks at the girl, feels the pulse and draws up the sheet over the face. He turns to her.)

DOCTOR. Why didn't you come sooner. I told you to let me know of the least change in her condition.

EMMA (flatly). I did come—I went for the doctor.

DOCTOR. Yes, but you waited. An hour more or less is mighty important sometimes. Why didn't you come?

EMMA (passes hand over face). Couldn't see. (Doctor looks at her curiously, then sympathetically takes out a small box of pills, and hands them to her.) Here, you're worn out. Take one of these every hour and try to get some sleep. (He departs.)

(She puts the pill-box on the table, takes up the low rocking chair and places it by the head of the bed. She seats herself and rocks monotonously and starts out of the door. A dry sob now and then. The wind from the open door blows out the lamp and she is seen by the little light from the window rocking in an even, monotonous gait, and sobbing.)

Flame From the Dark Tower

A Section of Poetry

From the Dark Tower

*W*e shall not always plant while others reap
 The golden increment of bursting fruit,
 Nor always countenance, abject and mute,
 That lesser men should hold their brothers cheap;
 Not everlastingly while others sleep
 Shall we beguile their limbs with mellow flute,
 Not always bend to some more subtle brute;
 We were not made eternally to weep.

The night whose sable breast relieves the stark,
 White stars is no less lovely being dark,
 And there are buds that cannot bloom at all
 In light, but crumple, piteous, and fall,
 So in the dark we hide the heart that bleeds,
 And wait, and tend our agonizing seeds.

COURTÉE CULLEN.

A Southern Road

*R*ed-colored tongue
 Parched beneath a burning sky,
 A lazy little tune
 Hummed up the crest of some
 Soft sloping hill,
 One streaming line of beauty
 Flowing by a forest
 Pregnant with tears,
 A hidden nest for beauty
 Idly flung by God
 In one lonely lingering hour
 Before the Sabbath,
 A blue-fruited black gun,
 Like a tall prokella,
 Bears a dangling figure,—
 Sacrificial dove to the raft,
 Seawing alone,
 A solemn, tortured shadow in the air.

HELENE JOHANSON.

~~~~~

Jungle Taste

*There is a coarseness
In the songs of black men
Coarse as the songs
Of the sea.
There is a weird strangeness
In the songs of black men
Which sounds not strange
To me.*

*There is beauty
In the faces of black women,
Jungle beauty
And mystery:
Dark, hidden beauty
In the faces of black women
Which only black men
See.*

~

Finality

*Trees are the souls of men
Reaching skyward,
And while each soul
Draws nearer God
His dark roots cleave
To earthly sod:
Death, only death
Brings triumph to the soul.
The silent grave alone
Can bare the goal.
Then roots and all
Must lie forgot—
To rot.*

EDWARD SILVERA.

~~~~~

~~~~~

The Death Bed

*All the time they were praying
He watched the shadow of a tree
Flicker on the wall.*

*There is no need of prayer,
He said,
No need at all.*

*The kin-folk thought it strange
That he should ask them from a dying bed,
But they left all in a row
And it seemed to ease him
To see them go.*

*There were some who kept on praying
In a room across the hall
And some who listened to the breeze
That made the shadows waver
On the wall.*

*He tried his nerve
On a song he knew
And made an empty note
That might have come,
From a bird's harsh throat.*

*And all the time it worried him
That they were in there praying
And all the time he wondered
What it was they could be saying.*

WARING CUNNEY.

~~~~~

Elevator Boy

I got a job now
 Runnin' an elevator
 In the Dennison Hotel in Jersey,
 Job aint no good though.
 No money around.
 Jobs are just chances
 Like everything else.
 Maybe a little luck now,
 Maybe not.
 Maybe a good job sometimes:
 Step out o' the barrel, boy.
 Two new suits an'
 A woman to sleep with.
 Maybe no luck for a long time.
 Only the elevators
 Goin' up an' down,
 Up an' down,
 Or somebody else's shoes
 To shine,
 Or greasy pots in a dirty kitchen.
 I been runnin' this
 Elevator too long.
 Guess I'll quit now.

LANGSTON HUGHES.

Railroad Avenue

*D*usk dark
 On Railroad Avenue,
 Lights in the fish joints,
 Lights in the pool rooms,
 A box car some train
 Has forgotten
 In the middle of the block.
 A player piano,
 A victrola.
 942
 Was the number.
 A boy
 Lounging on the corner,
 A passing girl
 With purple powdered skin.
 Laughter
 Suddenly
 Like a taut drum.
 Laughter
 Neither truth nor lie.
 Laughter
 Hardening the dusk dark evening.
 Laughter
 Shaking the lights in the fish joints,
 Rolling white balls in the pool rooms,
 And leaving untouched the box car
 Some train has forgotten.

LANGSTON HUGHES.

Length of Moon

*I*hen the golden hour
H'll tick its last
And the flame will go down in the flowers.

*A brighter length of moon
H'll mark the sea-time and the yellow dune.
Then we may think of this, yet
There will be something forgotten
And something we should forget.*

*It will be like all things we know:
A stone will fall; a rose is sure to go.
It will be quiet then and we may stay
Long at the picket gate,—
But there will be less to say.*

ARNA BONTEMPS.

Little Cinderella

*L*ook me over, kid!
I know I'm neat,—
Little Cinderella from head to feet.
Drinks all night at Club Alabama,—
If that comes next I don't give a damn!

*Daddy, daddy,
You sho' looks keen!
I likes men that are long and lean,
Broad Street ain't got no brighter lights
Than your eyes at pitch midnight.*

Streets

*Avenues of dreams
Boulewards of pain
Moaning black streams
Shimmering like rain.*

LEWIS ALEXANDER.

Lighting FIRE!!

This may all have begun one day when I met Tom (Wirth) through a mutual friend, Arnold Rampersad. Arnold is writing a biography of Langston Hughes, and he is one of the growing multitude of people who have taped interviews with me in a quest for first-hand impressions of the Negro Renaissance — the period in which Langston Hughes lived as one of the stars.

One of the bonuses in meeting Wirth was the chance to view his remarkable collection of Afro-Americana. Meeting my long-dead friends beautifully preserved in books, pamphlets and pictures opened my eyes to the fact that among the things which cluttered up my living quarters — I have the incurable habit of never throwing away things which more tidy people dispose of once they have finished using them — were possibly many things that deserved better treatment than they were receiving from my hands and careless care.

But then again it may have begun in those far-off days when, one summer's night in Washington, D.C., at Georgia Douglas Johnson's, I met Langston Hughes. Of course one met everyone sooner or later at Georgia's, but this night in 1925 it was Langston Hughes. He was a made-to-order Hero for me. At twenty-three he was only a scant four years older than I, and he had done everything — all the things young men dream of but never quite get done — worked on ships, gone to exotic places, known known people, written poetry that had appeared in print — everything. I suppose his looks contributed to the glamorous ideal, too . . . as did his voice and gentle manner.

We left Georgia Douglas' together, since we each lived but a few blocks from her house. Besides, we had been in the middle of a conversation. So he walked me to my corner of Thirteenth Street . . . and naturally, since we were again in mid-sentence, I walked him up to his house (near Seventeenth Street) . . . where again we had to walk back toward my house . . . and so the whole night went, because we never finished talking . . . to finish talking would never do . . . .

It was the beginning of many talking, walking evenings. I even wrote a poem. Who wouldn't have — talking with a real live poet who was also a real live friend of one's own age?

On one of those evenings Langston spoke, in that gentle, persuasive way of his, about things I had never thought of in quite the same way he made me begin to see them — about the importance of the Negro's contributing his share of himself to a world that, so far, had never considered him a real person at all. Of course, there had been Paul Laurence Dunbar, whose "Little Brown Baby" I had learned and had recited since I was five. And Chesnut, who had written novels and stories and whose son taught me at Dunbar High School. But they were not enough for Langston.

Langston was like Frederick Douglass to me, the way Mother had told me Douglass had been. As a child she had been a neighbor of Douglass' in Anacostia, and she had filled me with a monumental regard and respect for him. She had had no difficulty getting me to read the many things she had around the house about and by him. Yes, Langston to me was like Fred Douglass — only better, because Langston was a contemporary of mine. So when he suggested that maybe someone should start a magazine by, for, and about the Negro to show what we could do, it was a suggestion that took root.

I came back to New York with him (to see him receive a Crisis award), and the period of excitement and happiness and work began. I met everyone through him — Wally Thurman, Countee Cullen, Aaron Douglas, Zora Hurston — everyone!

While I was rooming with Wally, at whose house most of us gathered for rap sessions (with Langston always guiding unobtrusively), the Negro Quarterly was born. Langston had written a spiritual, for which Hall Johnson had written the music — a spiritual called FIRE! So naturally the Quarterly was named FIRE!!

It was discovering among my paraphernalia a copy, battered and torn, of this ancient magazine that, when I gave it to Tom to preserve in his inimitable way, triggered this present effort to share it with more people than the few who own the private collections or visit the closely guarded rarities in libraries. Langston, of course, and Langston's words — these come to mind. It was Langston who said on one of those almost forgotten evening walks that the Negro in America was like the phoenix and that some day he would rise from the fire to which America had consigned him. Considering the newly renewed interest in past things Black, it seems only fitting that there should be an opportunity for more to warm their hands at FIRE!!

Richard Bruce Nugent

FIRE!! In Retrospect

More than fifty years have passed since FIRE!! was published in November, 1926. Copies of the original are treasures beyond price. Langston Hughes reports in his autobiography The Big Sea that several hundred of them were consumed (quite literally) by a real fire in the basement where they were stored. Then FIRE!! went broke. Indeed, it never was solvent. Only the first issue of this "Quarterly Devoted to Younger Negro Artists" ever appeared.

By definition, treasures are not simply rare. They are important: its table of contents reveals instantly why FIRE!! is important. Here is a roster of major names in the chronicles of Afro-American literature and art: Wallace Thurman, Zora Neale Hurston, Aaron Douglas, Langston Hughes. These, the most talented and creative of their generation, combined to generate . . . FIRE!!

They came to Harlem from throughout the country. Wallace Thurman grew up in Salt Lake City and graduated from the University of Southern California; Zora Neale Hurston migrated from her home in Eatonville, Florida to Baltimore and then to Washington, D.C., where she studied at Howard University, before arriving in New York in 1925. Richard Bruce Nugent and John Preston Davis were natives of Washington. Aaron Douglas came from Kansas.

They had travelled. Nugent had been to Panama. Langston Hughes was born in Missouri and had lived in Kansas and Illinois, graduated from high school in Cleveland, and lived with his father in Mexico before he arrived in New York to attend Columbia in 1921. After his first year he dropped out, worked his way to Africa, and lived a while in Paris before returning to New York and Washington in 1924.

Gwendolyn Bennett, too, had been to Paris. A native of Giddings, Texas, she had studied at Columbia, graduated from the Pratt Institute and taught at Howard before taking a year's leave to study art in Paris on a scholarship from Delta Sigma Theta Sorority.

These seven who collaborated on FIRE!! were the more adventurous and unconventional of the younger Afro-American intellectuals. Thurman invented a name for them — The Niggerati. They loved it. The word fit their concept of themselves: clever, cultured, talented, perhaps a bit pretentious, but urbane enough to recognize that fact and to find their own pretense amusing.

The Niggerati had access to many worlds: the genteel homes of the light-skinned Brooklyn elite, the offices of W. E. B. Du Bois of the NAACP, Charles S. Johnson of the Urban League and A. Philip Randolph of the Messenger. A. Lelia Walker's extravagant parties at her Villa Lorraine in Irvington-on-Hudson and her Harlem townhouse, the salons of Carl Van Vechten and his sophisticated friends (who included many of the literary and theatrical celebrities of the day), the apartments of ordinary Harlemites throwing parties, to pay the rent, and the low-life cabarets, where, in the words of Langston Hughes, "long-headed jazzers play."

After FIRE!! they went their separate ways. In September, 1926, Langston Hughes entered his sophomore year at Lincoln University in Pennsylvania, returning on weekends to New York. His second book of poems, Fine Clothes to the Jew, was published by Knopf in 1927. For forty years thereafter, Hughes was the central creative force in Afro-American letters, publishing copiously in every conceivable genre, from poems, plays, novels and essays to opera librettos, popular song lyrics and children's books.

Zora Neale Hurston remained for a time in New York, studying anthropology at Barnard with Franz Boas. In 1927 she left for Florida to collect folklore. She became a major literary figure, publishing four novels, an autobiography, two books of folklore and innumerable articles and stories, but she died in obscurity in 1960.

John Preston Davis, who was FIRE!!'s business manager, returned to Harvard Law School. He had contributed short stories to Opportunity, a monthly published by the Urban League. After graduation, he entered politics and stumped for La Guardia's Fusion Party in 1933. From 1936 to 1940, as executive secretary of the National Negro Congress, an association of more than forty civil rights organizations, he was a leading critic of the New Deal from the perspective of the radical left. Later he became publicity director at Fisk and was editor and publisher of Our World. In 1966 he edited The American Negro Reference Book for the Phelps-Stokes Fund.

When the summer of 1926 was over, Gwendolyn Bennett returned to Washington, D.C., to resume her duties as a member of the Faculty in Fine Arts at Howard. She continued, however, as a regular columnist for Opportunity. She pursued a multifaceted career as a writer, artist and educator. In the Thirties she worked briefly in the Federal Writers' Project, then joined the Federal Art Project at the invitation of Augusta Savage and became Director of the Harlem Community Art Center. Later, she was Director of the George Washington Carver School, a privately supported community school in New York City. She died in 1981.*

Undaunted by FIRE!!'s financial difficulties, Wallace Thurman tried again with Harlem, a slightly more subdued periodical, in 1928. It, too, ran aground on financial shoals. In 1929 Thurman wrote a successful Broadway play of the same title in collaboration with William Jourdan Rapp. His first novel, The Blacker the Berry, a pioneer exploration of the psychological dynamics of color prejudice within the Black community, also appeared in 1929. Despite the feminine gender of the protagonist, the book was highly autobiographical. Thurman's own skin color was very dark. A brilliant editor who held senior positions with Macaulay Publishing Company, he also wrote for the screen in Hollywood. In 1932, six years after FIRE!!, Thurman published a novel about the Niggerati — Therians of the Spring. He died prematurely shortly thereafter.

Aaron Douglas was among the first Afro-American artists to incorporate strong African themes into his work. He illustrated innumerable books and dust jackets. He created murals for the Countee Cullen Branch Library, a dining room at 71st and Broadway, the Harlem YMCA, basement nightclubs along Lenox Avenue, and the Fisk University Library in Nashville. In 1937 he founded Fisk's art department, which he chaired until his retirement in 1966. He died in 1979.

After FIRE!!, Bruce Nugent joined the cast of Du Bose Heyward's stage play, Porgy, which toured the United States and England. He contributed to Thurman's Harlem. In the Thirties he, like Bennett, worked with the Federal Writers' and Art Projects, and with the Federal Theatre as well. He was associated with Dorothy West in producing Challenge and New Challenge, periodicals of considerable significance. The latter contained contributions from Ralph Ellison and Richard Wright — important early appearances for both these writers. In the Sixties, Bruce was one of the founders of the Harlem Cultural Council and worked especially hard on Danceable and Jazzable. He is the last survivor of the Niggerati. He lives in Hoboken.

Unlike Alain Locke's The New Negro, published

the year before, FIRE!! was not conceived and assembled by a single impresario. FIRE!! was the joint creation of these seven first-rate minds. A number of other significant talents also contributed to it. It was a special time and a special place which made the collaboration possible. Hence FIRE!! is, in a real sense, the Harlem Renaissance incarnate.

Financed by its creators, a small circle of their friends, and a printer who wasn't paid, FIRE!! was free from the restraints imposed by the need to please patrons and publishers (who tended to be wealthy and white). Unlike the contemporary periodicals Crisis and Opportunity — organs of the NAACP and the Urban League, respectively — FIRE!! was independent of sponsoring organizations with "target" political and social objectives. So there was no need to restrict its contents to material which would "elevate" the image of the Race as a means of contributing to social progress. The artists who created FIRE!! took full advantage of their freedom, brief though it was, to pursue and achieve the objective which united them in their diversity of intentions, sensibilities and styles: excellence. Excellence for its own sake. And excellence to show that the breadth and depth of talent existed among younger Negro artists to produce a literary magazine of the first rank.

They proved their point. Today, looking back over the body of work produced by the major Afro-American artists who followed them — Morrison, Baraka, Ellison, Brooks, Baldwin, Wright, and Hughes himself — we tend to forget how important that point was in 1926. Their very success has obscured the magnitude of their achievement: it no longer surprises us that FIRE!! burns still.

Zora Neale Hurston's "Sweet", for example, stands as a classic folk yarn, authentic in its nuances, specific to the Black milieu but also a powerful portrayal of the oppression of women generally and a brilliant variation on the myth of Eve, Adam and the Snake.

Hughes' "Elevator Boy" captures perfectly that ironic apathy which so often masks rage and pain: a detachment completely genuine, but not at all as simple as it seems.

Aaron Douglas' line drawings, so unlike his other work, charm us completely. His magnificent cover is the opening statement of FIRE!!'s themes: strength, sensitivity, and pride in heritage. One's eye first sees the lion/sphinx — ancient Africa. Circles, Chans, Angel! Then, around the edges, the profile of a young Black man appears. The circles are his carrying. The abstract designs on the left are his eyes, nose, and lips. These features, which in the Twenties were frequently the subject of vicious racist caricature, coalesce into a new standard of beauty. The forms are elemental and strong, but not closed. So, too, is this young Black man — symbol of his people.

*I would like to thank Dr. Sandra Y. Cozart of the University of Kentucky for much of this information about Gwendolyn Bennett.

Thurman's "Cordelia the Crude" portrays a real Harlem scene quite bluntly. But delicate overtones resonate in retrospect: the encounter of innocence with experience; the interplay of subtle distinctions of class. His brilliant closing essays on Van Vechten's Nigger Heaven is far more interesting today than the novel itself.

Richard Bruce Nugent wrote "Smoke, Lilies, and Jade" under the name of Richard Bruce so as not to disgrace the family name. That its theme is explicitly homosexual and its sensibility utterly incompatible with the work ethic made it, of all the pieces in FIRE, the primary target of hostile middle-class critics. We recognize in Bruce the quintessential Bohemian — a harbinger of the counterculture forty years before its time. Hughes presents him in The Big Sea.

Bruce Nugent took it [FIRE] around New York on foot and some of the Greenwich Village bookshops put it on display, and sold it for us. But then Bruce, who had no job, would collect the money and, on account of salary, cut it up before he got back to Harlem.

The Nugent persona disappeared from public life in the Thirties and Forties, only to be re-invented by the Beats of the Fifties and the flower children of the Sixties. Astonishingly, Bruce himself survives in the original.

THE FIRE!! PRESS

He reports that after FIRE appeared, Du Bois asked him, "Why don't you write more about Negroes?"

To which Bruce responded, "I write about myself, and I'm a Negro, aren't I?"

In this exchange is expressed a principle implicit in FIRE — that despite all obstacles, the artist must express the truth within himself. That the artist must do so, not for art's sake, but for his own sake, his people's sake and for the sake of humankind. And that neither self, nor truth, nor art can be divided into boxes labelled "Black" and "White", or "High" and "Low".

FIRE, then, is a concrete manifestation of Langston Hughes' artistic credo, first set forth in The Nation only five months before FIRE itself appeared:

We younger Negro artists who create now intend to express our individual dark-skinned selves without fear or shame. If white people are pleased we are glad. If they are not, it doesn't matter. We know we are beautiful.

And ugly, too. The tom-tom cries and the tom-tom laughs. If colored people are pleased we are glad. If they are not, their displeasure doesn't matter either. We build our temples for tomorrow, strong as we know how, and we stand on top of the mountain, free within ourselves.

Few indeed are destined to succeed so brilliantly at that which they set about to do.

Thomas H. Wright

Wedding Day

His name was Paul Watson and as he shamelessly bled down rue Pigalle he might have been any other Negro of enormous height and size. But as I have said, his name was Paul Watson. Passing him on the street, you might not have known or cared who he was, but any one of the residents about the great Montmartre district of Paris could have told you who he was as well as many interesting bits of his personal history.

He had come to Paris in the days before colored jazz bands were the style. Back home he had been a prize fighter. In the days when Joe Gans was in his glory Paul was following the ring, too. He didn't have that fine way about him that Gans had and for that reason luck seemed to go against him. When he was in the ring he was like a mad bull, especially if his opponent was a white man. In those days there wasn't any sympathy or mercy about the ring and so pretty soon all the ring-masters got down on Paul and he found it pretty hard to get a bout with anyone. Then it was that he worked his way across the Atlantic Ocean on a big liner—in the days before colored jazz bands were the style in Paris.

Things flowed along smoothly for the first few years with Paul's working here and there in the unfrequented places of Paris. On the side he used to give boxing lessons to aspiring youths or gymnasium young women. At that time he was working so steadily that he had little chance to find out what was going on around Paris. Pretty soon, however, he grew to be known among the trainers and managers began to fix up bouts for him. After one or two successful bouts a little fame began to come into being for him. So it was that after one of the prize-fights, a colored fellow came to his dressing room to congratulate him on his success as well as invite him to go to Montmartre to meet "the boys."

Paul had a way about him and seemed to get on with the colored fellows who lived in Montmartre and when the first Negro jazz band played in a tiny Parisian cabé Paul was among them playing the banjo. Those first years were without event so far as Paul was concerned. The members of that first band often say now that they wonder how it was that nothing happened during those first seven years, for it was generally known how great was Paul's hatred for American white people. I suppose the tranquility in the light of what happened afterwards was due to the fact that the care in which they worked was one in which mostly French people drank and danced and then too, that was before there were so many Americans visiting Paris. However, everyone had heard Paul speak of his intense hatred of American white folks.

It only took two Benedictines to make him start talking about what he would do to the first "Yank" that called him "nigger." But the seven years came to an end and Paul Watson went to work in a larger cabé with a larger band, patronized almost solely by Americans.

I've heard almost every Negro in Montmartre tell about the night that a drunken Kentuckian came into the cabé where Paul was playing and said: "Look here, Brother, what you all den' grab heah?"

"None ya bizness. And looka here, I ain't your brother, see?"

"Jahk, do you heah that nigger talkin' lak that rah me?"

As he said this, he turned to speak to his companion. I have often wished that I had been there to have seen the thing happen myself. Every tale I have heard about it was different and yet there was something of truth in each of them. Perhaps the nearest one can come to the truth is by saying that Paul beat up about four full-sized white men that night besides doing a great deal of damage to the furniture about the cabé. I couldn't tell you just what did happen. Some of the fellows say that Paul seized the nearest table and shoved down men right and left; others say he took a bottle, then began the story runs that a chair was the instrument of his fury. At any rate, that started Paul Watson on his seige against the American white person who brings his native prejudices into the life of Paris.

It is a verity that Paul was the "black terror." The last syllable of the word, nigger, never passed the lips of a white man without the quick reflex action of Paul's arm and fist to the speaker's jaw. He paid for more glassware and cabé furnishings in the course of the next few years than is easily imaginable. And yet, there was something likable about Paul. Perhaps that's the reason that he stood in so well with the policemen of the neighborhood. Always some divine power seemed to intervene in his behalf and he was excused after the payment of a small fine with advice about his future conduct. Finally, there came the night when in a frenzy he shot the two American sailors.

They had not died from the wounds he had given them hence his sentence had not been one of death but rather a long term of imprisonment. It was a pitiable sight to see Paul sitting in the corner of his cell with his great body hunched almost double. He seldom talked and when he did his words were interspersed with oaths about the lowness of "crackers." Then the World War came.

It seems strange that anything so horrible as that wholesale slaughter could bring about any good and yet there was something of a smoothing quality about even its baseness. There has never been such equality before or since such as that which the World War brought. Rich men fought by the side of paupers; poets swapped yarns with dry-goods salesmen, while Jews and Christians ate corned beef out of the same tin. Along with the general leveling influence came France's pardon of her prisoners in order that they might enter the army. Paul Watson became fire and a French soldier. Because he was strong and had innate daring in his heart he was placed in the aerial squad and cited many times for bravery. The close of the war gave him his place in French society as a hero. With only a memory of the war and an ugly scar on his left cheek he took up his old life.

His firm resolutions about American white people still remained intact and many chance encounters that followed the war are told from lip to lip proving that the war and his previous imprisonment had changed him little. He was the same Paul Watson to Montmartre as he shambled up rue Pigalle.

Rue Pigalle in the early evening has a somber beauty—gray as are most Paris streets and other-worldish. To those who know the district it is the Harlem of Paris and rue Pigalle is its dusky Seventh Avenue. Most of the colored musicians that furnish Parisians and their visitors with entertainment live somewhere in the neighborhood of rue Pigalle. Some time during every day each of these musicians makes a point of passing through rue Pigalle. Little wonder that almost any day will find Paul Watson going his shuffling way up the same street.

He reached the corner of rue de la Bruyere and with sure instinct his feet stopped. Without half thinking he turned into "the Pit." Its full name is The Flea Pit. If you should ask one of the musicians why it was so called, he would answer you to the effect that it was called "the pit" because all the "hears" hang out there. If you did not get the full import of this explanation, he would go further and say that there were always "spades" in the pit and they were as thick as fleas. Unless you could understand this latter attempt at clarity you could not fully grasp what the Flea-Pit means to the Negro musicians in Montmartre. It is a tiny cote of the genus that is called diestro in France. Here the fiddle players, saxophone blowers, drum-beaters and ivory ticklers gather at four in the afternoon for a potto or a game of billiards. Here the cabaret entertainers and supper musicians meet at one o'clock at night or thereafter for a whiskey and soda, or more billiards. Occasional sandwiches and a "quiet game" also play their parts in the popularity of the place. After a season or two it becomes a settled fact just what time you may catch so-and-so at the famous "Pit."

The musicians were very fond of Paul and took particular delight in teasing him. He was one of the chosen few that all of the musicians conceded as being "regular." It was the pet joke of the habitués of the cote that Paul never bothered with girls. They always said that he could beat up ten men but was scared to death of one woman.

"Say fellow, when ya goin' a get hooked up?"

"Can't say, Bo. Ain't so much on skirts."

"Man alive, ya don't know what you're missin'—somebody little and cute telling ya sweet things in your ear. Paris is full of woman folks."

"I ain't much on 'em all the same. Then too, they're all white."

"What's it to ya? This ain't America!"

"Can't help that. Get this—I'm collud, see? I ain't got nothing for no white meat to do. If a woman eva called me nigger I'd have to kill her, that's all!"

"You for it, son. I can't give you a thing on this Mr. Jefferson Lawd way of lookin' at women."

"Oh, tain't that. I guess they're all right for those that wants 'em. Nor me!"

"Oh you ain't so forty. You'll fall like all the other spades I've ever seen. Your kind falls hardest."

And so Paul went his way—alone. He smoked and drank with the fellows and sat for hours in the Montmartre cafes and never knew the companionship of a woman. Then one night after his work he was walking along the street in his queer shuffling way when a woman stepped up to his side.

"Naw, govnan away from here."

"Oh, you speak English, don't you?"

"Used to be 'fore I went on the stage and got stranded over here."

"Well, get away from here. I don't like your kind!"

"Aw, Buddy, don't say that. I ain't prejudiced like some fool women."

"You don't know who I am, do you? I'm Paul Watson and I hate American white folks, see?"

He pushed her aside and went on walking alone. He hadn't gone far when she caught up to him and said with sobs in her voice—

"Oh, Lordy, please don't hate me 'cause I was born white and an American. I ain't got a sou in my name and all the men pass me by 'cause I ain't spruced up. Now you come along and won't look at me 'cause I'm white."

Paul strode along with her clinging to his arm. He tried to shake her off several times but there was no use. She clung all the more desperately to him. He looked down at her frail body shaken with sobs, and something caught at his heart. Before he knew what he was doing he had said:—

"Naw, I ain't that mean. I'll get you some grub. Quit your cryin'. Don't like seein' women folks cry."

It was the talk of Montmartre. Paul Watson takes a woman to Gavarrini's every night for dinner. He comes to the Flea Pit less frequently, thus giving the other musicians plenty of opportunity to discuss him.

"How times do change. Paul, the woman-hater, has a Jane now."

"You ain't said nothing, fella. That ain't all. She's white and an 'merican, too."

"That's the way with these spades. They beat up all the white men they can lay their hands on but as soon as a gang of golden hair with blue eyes rubs up close to them they forget all they ever said about hatin' white folks."

"Guess he thinks that skirt's gone on him. Dumb fool!"

"Don't be no chinaman. That old gag don't fit for Paul. He can't understand it no more'n we can. Says he jess can't help himself, everytime she looks up into his eyes and asks him does he love her. They sure are happy together. Paul's goin' to marry her, too. At first she kept saying that she didn't want to get married 'cause she wasn't the marrying kind and all that talk. Paul just laid down the law to her and told her he never would live with no woman without being married to her. Then she began to tell him all about her past life. He told her he didn't care nothing about what she used to be just so long as they loved each other now. Guess they'll make it."

"Yeah, Paul told me the same tale last night. He's sure gone on her all right."

"They're gettin' tied up next Sunday. So glad like some fool women."

It's not me. Don't trust these American dames. Me for the Frenchies."

"She ain't so worse for looks, Bud. Now that he's been furnishing the grub for the night."

"Yeah, but I don't see no reason for the wedding bells. She was right—she ain't the marrying kind."

... and so Montmartre talked. In every cote where the Negro musicians congregated Paul Watson was the topic for conversation. He had suddenly fallen from his place as bronze God to almost less than the dust.

The morning sun made queer patterns on Paul's sleeping face. He grimaced several times in his slumber, then finally half-opened his eyes. After a succession of dream-laden blinks he gave a great yawn, and rubbing his eyes, looked at the open window through which the sun shone brightly. His first conscious thought was that this was the bride's day and that bright sunshine prophesied happiness for the bride throughout her married life. His first impulse was to settle back into the covers and think drowsily about Mary and the queer twists she brings about, as is the wont of most bridegrooms on their last morning of bachelorhood. He put this impulse aside in favor of dressing quickly and rushing downstairs to telephone to Mary to say "happy wedding day" to her.

One huge foot slipped into a worn bedroom slipper and then the other dragged painfully out of its warm bed were the courageous beginnings of his bridal toilette. With a look of triumph he put on his new gray suit that he had ordered from an English tailor. He carefully pulled a taffeta tie into place beneath his chin, noting as he looked at his face in the mirror that the scar he had received in the army was very ugly—funny, marrying an ugly man like him.

French telephones are such human faults. After trying for about fifteen minutes to get Central 3201 he decided that he might as well walk around. To Mary's hotel to give his greeting as to stand there in the lobby of his own, wasting his time. He debated this in his mind a great deal. They were to be married at four o'clock. It was eleven now and it did seem a shame not to let her have a minute or two by herself. As he went walking down the street towards her hotel he laughed to think of how one always congratulates over doing something and finally does the thing he wanted to in the beginning anyway.

Mud on his nice gray suit that the English tailor had made for him. Damn—gray suit—what did he have a gray suit on for, anyway. Folks with black faces shouldn't wear gray suits. Gawd, but it was funny that time when he beat up that cracker at the Peniguet. Fool couldn't shut his mouth he was so surprised. Crackers—damn 'em—he was one nigger that wasn't 'raid of 'em. Wouldn't he have a hell of a time if he went back to America where black was black. Wasn't white nowhere, black wasn't. What was that thought he was trying to get aboid of—bumping around in his head—something he started to think about but couldn't remember it somehow.

The shrill whistle that is typical of the French subway pierced its way into his thoughts. Subway—why was he in the subway—he didn't want to go any place. He heard doors slamming and saw the blue uniforms of the conductors swinging on to the cars as the trains began to pull out of the station. With one or two strides he reached the last coach as it began to move up the platform. A bit out of breath he stood inside the train and looking down at what he had in his hand he saw that it was a tiny pink ticket. A first class ticket in a second class coach. The idea set him to laughing. Everyone in the car turned and eyed him, but that did not bother him. Wonder what stop he'd get off—funny how these French said descend when they meant get off—funny he couldn't pick up French—been here so long. First class ticket in a second class coach! —that was one on him. Wedding day today, and that damn letter from Mary. How'd she say it now, "just couldn't go through with it," white women just don't marry colored men, and she was a street woman, too. Why couldn't she have told him flat that she was just getting back on her feet at his expense. Funny that first class ticket he bought, wish he could see Mary—him a-going there to wish her "happy wedding day," too. Wonder what that French woman was looking at him so hard for? Guess it was the mud.

Gwendolyn Bennett.

Three Drawings

Aaron Douglas

Smoke, Lilies and Jade

He wanted to do something . . . to write or draw . . . or something . . . but it was so comfortable just to lay there on the bed . . . his shoes off . . . and think . . . think of everything . . . short disconnected thoughts—to wonder . . . to remember . . . to think and smoke . . . why wasn't he worried that he had no money . . . he had had five cents . . . but he had been hungry . . . he was hungry and still . . . all he wanted to do was lay there comfortably smoking . . . think . . . or wishing he were writing . . . or drawing . . . or something . . . something about the things he felt and thought . . . but what did he think . . . he remembered how his mother had awakened him one night . . . ages ago . . . six years ago . . . Alex . . . he had always wondered at the strangeness of it . . . she had seemed so . . . so . . . so just the same . . . Alex . . . I think your father is dead . . . and it hadn't seemed so strange . . . yet . . . one's mother didn't say that . . . didn't wake one at midnight every night to say . . . feel him . . . put your hand on his head . . . then whisper with a catch in her voice . . . I'm afraid . . . sh don't wake Lam . . . yet it hadn't seemed as it should have seemed . . . even when he had felt his father's cool wet forehead . . . it hadn't been tragic . . . the light had been turned very low . . . and flickered . . . yet it hadn't been tragic . . . or weird . . . not at all as one should feel when one's father died . . . even his reply of . . . yes he is dead . . . had been commonplace . . . hadn't been dramatic . . . there had been no tears . . . no sobs . . . not even a sorrow . . . and yet he must have realized that one's father couldn't smile . . . or sing any more . . . after he had died . . . every one remembered his father's voice . . . it had been a lush voice . . . a promise . . . then that dressing together . . . his mother and himself . . . in the bathroom . . . why was the bathroom always the warmest room in the winter . . . as they had put on their clothes . . . his mother had been telling him what he must do . . . and cried softly . . . and that had made him cry too but you mustn't cry Alex . . . remember you have to be a little man now . . . and that was all . . . didn't other wives and sons cry more for their dead than that . . . anyway people never cried for beautiful sunsets . . . or music . . . and those were the things that hurt . . . the things to sympathize with . . . then out into the snow and dark of the morning . . . first to the undertaker's . . . no first to Uncle Frank's . . . why did Aunt Laila have to act like that . . . to ask again and again . . . but when did he die . . .

when did he die . . . I just can't believe it . . . poor Mirreva . . . then out into the snow and dark again . . . how had his mother expected him to know where the most sensible of them all tho . . . all he had said was . . . what . . . Harry Francis . . . too bad . . . tell mamma I'll be there first thing in the morning . . . then down the deserted streets again . . . to grandmother's . . . it was growing light now . . . it must be terrible to die in daylight . . . grandpa had been sweeping the snow off the yard . . . he had been glad of that because . . . well he could tell him better than grandpa . . . grandpa . . . father's dead . . . and he hadn't acted strange either . . . books laid . . . he had just looked at Alex a moment then continued sweeping . . . all he said was . . . what time did he die . . . she'll want to know . . . then passing thru the lonesome street toward home . . . Mrs. Mamie Grant was closing a window and spied him . . . hallow Alex . . . ah how's your father this mornin . . . dead . . . get out . . . ech tech teh an I was just around there with a cup of custard yesterday . . . Alex puffed contentedly on his cigarette . . . he was hungry and comfortable . . . and he had an worry holder inland with red jade and green . . . funny how the smoke seemed to climb up that ray of sunlight . . . went up the slant just like imagination . . . was imagination blue . . . or was it because he had spent his last five cents and couldn't worry . . . anyway it was nice to lay there and wonder . . . and remember . . . why was he so different from other people . . . the only things he remembered of his father's funeral were the crowded church and the ride in the hack . . . so many people there in the church . . . and ladies with tears in their eyes . . . and on their cheeks . . . and some men too . . . why did people cry . . . vanity that was all . . . yet they weren't exactly hypocrites . . . but why . . . it had made him furious . . . all these people crying . . . it wasn't their father . . . and he wasn't crying . . . couldn't cry for sorrow altho he had loved his father more than . . . than . . . it had made him so angry that tears had come to his eyes . . . and he had been ashamed of his mother . . . crying into a handkerchief . . . so ashamed that tears had run down his cheeks and he had frowned . . . and some one . . . a woman . . . had said . . . look at that poor little dear . . . Alex is just like his father . . . and the tears had run fast . . . because he wasn't like his father . . . he couldn't sing . . . he didn't want to sing . . . he didn't want to sing . . . Alex blew a cloud of smoke . . . blue smoke . . . when they had taken his father from the vault three weeks later . . . he had grown beautiful . . . his nose had become perfect and clear . . . his hair had turned jet black and glossy and silky . . . and his skin was a transparent green . . . like the sea only not so deep . . . and where it was drawn over the cheek bones a pale beautiful red appeared . . . like a blush . . . why hadn't his father looked like that always . . . but no . . . to have sung would have broken the wondrous repose of his lips and maybe that was his beauty . . . maybe it was wrong to think thoughts like these . . . but they were nice and pleasant and comfortable . . . when one was smoking a cigarette thru an ivory holder . . . inlaid with red jade and green . . .

feel Alex with nothing in your pockets . . . I don't see how you can be satisfied . . . Really you're a mystery to me . . . and who you take after . . . I'm sure I don't know . . . none of my brothers were hairy and shirtless . . . I can never remember the time when they weren't sending money home and your father was your age he was supporting a family . . . where you get your nerve I don't know . . . just because you've tried to write one or two little poems and stories that no one understands . . . you seem to think the world owes you a living . . . you should see by now how much is thought of them . . . you can't sell anything . . . and you won't do anything to make money . . . wake up Alex . . . I don't know what will become of you . . .

It was hard to believe in one's self after that . . . did Wilde's parents or Shelley's or Goya's talk to them like that . . . but it was depressing to think in that vein . . . Alex stretched and yawned . . . Max had died . . . Margaret had died . . . so had Santa . . . Cynthia . . . Juan-Jose and Harry . . . all people he had loved . . . loved one by one and together . . . and all had died . . . he never loved a person long before they died . . . in truth he was tragic . . . that was a lovely appellation . . . The Tragic Genius . . . think . . . to go thru life known as The Tragic Genius . . . romantic . . . but it was more of less true . . . Alex turned over and blew another cloud of smoke . . . was all life like that . . . smoke . . . blue smoke from an ivory holder . . . he wished he were in New Bedford . . . New Bedford was a nice place . . . snug little houses set complacently behind protecting lawns . . . half open windows showing prim interiors from behind waving cool curtains . . . inviting . . . like precise courtesans winking from behind lace fans . . . and trees . . . many trees . . . casting lacy patterns of shade on the sun dappled sidewalks . . . small stores . . . naively proud of their pseudo grandeur . . . banks . . . called institutions for saving . . . all naive . . . that was it . . . New Bedford was naive . . . after the sophistication of New York it would fan one like a refreshing breeze . . . and yet he had returned to New York . . . and sophistication . . . was he sophisticated . . . no because he was seldom bored . . . seldom bored by anything . . . and weren't the sophisticated habitually suffering from ennui . . . on the contrary . . . he was amused . . . amused by the artificiality of naivety and sophistication alike . . . but may be that in itself was the essence of sophistication or . . . was it cynicism . . . or were the two identical . . . he blew a cloud of smoke . . . it was growing dark now . . . and the smoke no longer had a ladder to climb . . . but soon the moon would rise and then he would clothe the silver moon in blue smoke garments . . . truly smoke was like imagination . . .

Alex sat up . . . pulled on his shoes and went out . . . it was a beautiful night . . . and so large . . . the dusky blue hung like a curtain in an immense arched doorway . . . fastened with silver tacks . . . to wander in the night was wonderful . . . myriads of inquisitive lights . . . curiously prying into the dark . . . and fading unsatisfied . . . he passed a woman . . . she was not beautiful . . . and he was sad because she did not weep that she would never be beautiful . . . was it Wilde who had said . . . a cigarette is the most perfect pleasure because it leaves one unsatisfied . . . the breeze gave to him a perfume stolen from some wandering lady of the evening . . . it pleased him . . . why was it that men wouldn't use perfumes . . . they should . . . each and every one of them liked perfumes . . . the man who denied that was a liar . . . or a coward . . . but if ever he were to voice that thought . . . express it . . . he would be misunderstood . . . a fine feeling that . . . to be misunderstood . . . it made him feel tragic and great . . . but may be it would be nicer to be understood . . . but no . . . no great artist is . . . then again neither were fools . . . they were strangely akin these two . . . Alex thought of a sketch he would make . . . a personality sketch of Panita . . . straight classic features tinted proud purple . . . sensuous fine lips . . . gilded for truth . . . eyes . . . half opened and lids colored mysterious green . . . hair black and straight . . . drawn sternly mocking back from the false puritanical forehead . . . maybe he would make Edith too . . . skin a blue . . . infinite like night . . . and eyes . . . slant and grey . . . very complacent like a cat's . . . Mona Lisa's lips . . . red and seductive as . . . as pomegranate juice . . . in truth it was fine to be young and hungry and an artist . . . to blow blue smoke from an ivory holder . . .

here was the cafeteria . . . it was almost as tho it had journeyed to meet him . . . the night was so blue . . . how does blue feel . . . or red or gold or any other color . . . if colors could be heard he could paint most wondrous tunes . . . symphonious . . . think . . . the dulcet clear tone of a blue like might . . . of a red like pomegranate juice . . . like Edith's lips . . . of the fairy tones to be heard in a sunset . . . like rubies shaken in a crystal cup . . . of the symphony of Panita . . . and silver . . . and gold . . . he had heard the sound of gold . . . but they weren't the sounds he wanted to catch . . . no . . . they must be liquid . . . not so staccato but flowing variations of the same caliber . . . there was no one in the cafe as yet . . . he sat and waited . . . that was a clever idea he had had about color music . . . but after all he was a monstrous clever fellow . . . Jurgens had said that . . . funny how characters in books said the things one wanted to say . . . he would like to know Jurgens . . . how does one go about getting an introduction to a fiction character . . . go up to the brown cover of the book and knock gently . . . and say hello . . . then timidly . . . is Duke Jurgens there . . . or . . . no because if entered the book in the beginning Jurgens would only be a pawn broker . . . and one didn't enter a book in the center . . . but what foolishness . . . Alex lit a cigarette . . . but Cabell was a master to have written Jurgens . . . and an artist . . . and a poet . . . Alex blew a cloud of smoke . . . a few lines of one of Langston's poems came to describe Jurgens . . .

Somewhat like Ariel
Somewhat like Puck
Somewhat like a gutter boy
Who loves to play in muck.
Somewhat like Bacchus
Somewhat like Pan
And a way with women
Like a sailor man . . .

Langston must have known Jurgens . . . suppose Jurgens had met Tonto Kroeger . . . what a vagrant thought . . . Kroeger . . . Kroeger . . . why here was Rene . . . Alex had almost gone to sleep . . . Alex blew a cone of smoke as he took Rene's hand . . . it was nice to have friends like Rene . . . so comfortable . . . Rene was speaking . . . Borga joined them . . . and de Diego Padro . . . their talk veered to . . . James Branch Cabell . . . beautiful . . . marvelous . . . Rene had an enchanting accent . . . said sank for thank and souse for south . . . but they couldn't know Cabell's greatness . . . Alex searched the smoke for expression . . . he . . . well he has created a phantasmic mire . . . that's it . . . from clear rich imagery . . . life and silver sands . . . that's nice . . . and silver sands . . . imagine lilies growing in such a mire . . . when they close at night their gilded underside would protect . . . but that's not it at all . . . his thoughts just carried and untinged like . . . like odors . . . suggested but never definite . . . Rene was leaving . . . they all were leaving . . . Alex snattered slowly back . . . the houses all looked sleepy . . . funny . . . made him feel like writing poetry . . . and about death too . . . an elevated crashed by overhead scattering all his thoughts with its noise . . . making them spread . . . in circles . . . then larger circles . . . just like a splash in a calm pool . . . what had he been thinking . . . of . . . a poem about death . . .

but he no longer felt that urge . . . just walk and think and wonder . . . think and remember and smoke . . . blow smoke that mixed with his thoughts and the night . . . he would like to live in a large white palace . . . to wear a long black cape . . . very full and lined with vermilion . . . to have many cushions and to lie there among them . . . talking to his friends . . . lie there in a yellow silk shirt and black velvet trousers . . . like music-review artists taking and pouring strange liquors from curiously beautiful bottles . . . bottles with long slender necks . . . he climbed the noisy stair of the odorous tenement . . . snuffed of fish . . . of stale fried fish and dirty milk bottles . . . he rather liked it . . . strong . . . the acrid smell of horse manure too . . . strong . . . thoughts . . . yes to lie back among strangely fashioned cushions and sip eastern wines and talk . . . Alex threw himself on the bed . . . removed his shoes . . . stretched and relaxed . . . yes and have music wait softly into the darkened and incensed room . . . he blew a cloud of smoke . . . oh the joy of being an artist and of blowing blue smoke thru an ivory holder inlaid with red jade and green . . .

↳

the street was so long and narrow . . . so long and narrow . . . and blue . . . in the distance it reached the stars . . . and if he walked long enough . . . far enough . . . he could reach the stars too . . . the narrow blue was so empty . . . quiet . . . Alex walked music . . . it was nice to walk in the blue after a party . . . Zora had shone again . . . her stories . . . she always shone . . . and Monty was glad . . . every one was glad when Zora shone . . . he was glad he had gone to Monty's party . . . Monty had a nice place in the village . . . nice lights . . . and friends and wine . . . mother would be scandalized that he could think of going to a party . . . without a copper to his name . . . but then mother had never been to Monty's . . . and mother had never seen the street seen long and narrow and blue . . . Alex walked music . . . the click of his heels kept time with a tune in his mind . . . he glanced into a lighted cate window . . . inside were people sipping coffee . . . men . . . why did they sit there in the loud light . . . didn't they know that outside the street . . . the narrow blue street met the stars . . . that if they walked long enough . . . far enough . . . Alex walked and the click of his heels sounded . . . and had an echo . . . sound being tossed back and forth . . . back and forth . . . some one was approaching . . . and their echoes mingled . . . and gave the sound of castanets . . . Alex liked the sound of the approaching man's footsteps . . . he walked music also . . . he knew the beauty of the narrow blue . . . Alex knew that by the way their echoes mingled . . . he wished he would speak . . . but strangers don't speak at four o'clock in the morning . . . at least if they did he couldn't imagine what would be said . . . maybe . . . pardon me but are you walking toward the stars . . . yes, sit, and if you walk long enough . . . then may I walk with you I want to reach the stars too . . . pardon me senior tiene vd. fostoro . . . Alex was glad he had been addressed in Spanish . . . to have been asked for a match in English . . . or to have been addressed in English at all . . . would have been blasphemous just then . . . Alex handed him a match . . . he glanced at his companion appreciatively in the match glow . . . he was afraid that his appearance would shatter the blue thoughts . . . and stars . . . ah . . . his face was a perfect compliment to his voice . . . and the echo of their steps mingled . . . they walked in silence . . . the castanets of their heels clicking accompaniment . . . the stranger inhaled deeply and with a nod of content and a smile . . . blew a cloud of smoke . . . Alex felt like singing . . . the stranger knew the magic of blue smoke also . . . they continued in silence . . . the castanets of their heels clicking rhythmically . . . Alex turned in his doorway . . . up the stairs and the stranger waited for him to light the room . . . no need for words . . . they had always known each other . . . as they undressed by the blue dawn . . . Alex knew he had never seen a more perfect being . . . his body was all symmetry and music . . . and Alex called him Beauty . . . long they lay . . . blowing smoke and exchanging thoughts . . . and Alex swallowed with difficulty . . . he felt a glow of tremor . . . and they talked and . . . slept . . .

Alex wondered more and more why he liked Adrian so . . . he liked many people . . . Walle . . . Zora . . . Clement . . . Gloria . . . Langston . . . John . . . Gremmy . . . oh many people . . . and they were friends . . . but Beauty . . . it was different . . . once Alex had admired Beauty's strength . . . and Beauty's eyes had grown soft and he had said . . . I like you more than any one Dulce . . . Adrian always called him Dulce . . . and Alex had become confused . . . was it that he was so susceptible to beauty that Alex liked Adrian so much . . . but no . . . he knew other people who were beautiful . . . Fania and Gloria . . . Monty and Bunny . . . but he was never confused before them . . . while Beauty . . . Beauty could make him believe in Buddha . . . or imps . . . and no one else could do that . . . that is no one but Melva . . . but then he was in love with Melva . . . and that explained that . . . he would like Beauty to know

Melva . . . they were both so perfect . . . such compliments . . . yes he would like Beauty to know Melva because he loved them both . . . there . . . he had thought it . . . actually dared to think it . . . but Beauty must never know . . . Beauty couldn't understand . . . indeed Alex couldn't understand . . . and it pained him . . . almost physically . . . and tired his mind . . . Beauty . . . Beauty was in the air . . . the smoke . . . Beauty . . . Melva . . . Beauty . . . Melva . . . Alex slept . . . and dreamed . . . he was in a field . . . a field of blue smoke and black poppies and red calla lilies . . . he was searching on his hands and knees . . . searching . . . among black poppies and red calla lilies . . . he was searching pushed aside poppy stems . . . and saw two strong white legs . . . dancer's legs . . . the contours pleased him . . . his eyes wandered . . . on past the muscular hocks to the firm white thighs . . . the rounded buttocks . . . then the lily narrow waist . . . strong torso and broad deep chest . . . the heavy shoulders . . . the graceful muscled neck . . . squared chin and quizzical lips . . . Grecian nose with its temperamental nostrils . . . the brown eyes looking at him . . . like . . . Monty looked at Zora . . . his hair curly and black and all tousled . . . and it was Beauty . . . and Beauty smiled and looked at him and smiled . . . said . . . I'll wait Alex . . . and Alex became confused and continued his search . . . on his hands and knees . . . pushing aside poppy stems and lily stems . . . a poppy . . . a black poppy . . . a lilly . . . a red lilly . . . and when he looked back he could no longer see Beauty . . . Alex continued his search . . . thru poppies . . . lilies . . . poppies and red calla lilies . . . and suddenly he saw . . . two small feet olive-ivory . . . two well turned legs curving gracefully from slender ankles . . . and the contours soothed him . . . he followed them . . . past the narrow rounded hips to the tiny waist . . . the fragile firm breasts . . . the graceful slender throat . . . the soft rounded chin . . . slightly parting lips and straight little nose with its slightly flaring nostrils . . . the black eyes with lights in them . . . looking at him . . . the forehead and straight out black hair . . . and it was Melva . . . and she looked at him and smiled and said . . . I'll wait Alex . . . and Alex became confused and kissed her . . . became confused and continued his search . . . on his hands and knees . . . pushed aside a poppy stem . . . a black-poppy stem . . . pushed aside a lily stem . . . a red lily stem . . . a poppy . . . a poppy . . . a lily . . . and suddenly he stood erect . . . exultant . . . and in his hand he held . . . an ivory holder . . . inlaid with red jade . . . and green . . . and Alex awoke . . . Beauty's hair tickled his nose

Beauty was smiling in his sleep . . . half his face stained flush color by the sun . . . the other half in shadow . . . blue shadow . . . his eye lashes casting colorfully blue shadows on his cheek . . . his lips were so beautiful . . . quizzical . . . Alex wondered why he always thought of that passage from Wilde's Salome . . . when he looked at Beauty's lips . . . I would kiss your lips . . . he would like to kiss Beauty's lips . . . Alex flushed warm . . . with shame . . . or was it shame . . . he reached across Beauty for a cigarette . . . Beauty's cheek felt cool to his arm . . . his hair felt soft . . . Alex lay smoking . . . such a dream . . . red calla lilies . . . red calla lilies . . . and . . . what could it all mean . . . did dreams have meanings . . . Fania said . . . and black poppies . . . thousands . . . millions . . . Beauty stirred . . . Alex put out his cigarette . . . closed his eyes . . . he mustn't see Beauty yet . . . speak to him . . . his lips were too hot . . . dry . . . the palms of his hands too cool and moist . . . thru his half closed eyes he could see Beauty . . . propped . . . check in hand . . . on one elbow . . . looking at him . . . lips smiling quizzically . . . he wished Beauty wouldn't look so hard . . . Alex was finding it difficult to breathe . . . breathe normally . . . why must Beauty look so long . . . and smile that way . . . his face seemed nearer . . . it was . . . Alex could feel Beauty's hair on his forehead . . . breathe normally . . . breathe normally . . . could feel Beauty's breath on his nostrils and lips . . . and it was clean and faintly colored with tobacco . . . breathe normally Alex . . . Beauty's lips were nearer . . . Alex closed his eyes . . . how did one act . . . his pulse was hammering . . . from wrists to finger tip . . . writ to finger tip . . . Beauty's lips touched his . . . his temples throbbed . . . throbbed . . . his pulse hammered from wrist to finger tip . . . Beauty's breath came short now . . . softly staccato . . . breathe normally Alex . . . you are asleep . . . Beauty's lips touched his . . . breathe normally . . . and pressed . . . pressed hard . . . cool . . . his body trembled . . . breathe normally Alex . . . Beauty's lips pressed cool . . . cool and hard . . . how much pressure does it take to waken one . . . Alex sighed . . . moved softly . . . how does one act . . . Beauty's hair barely touched him now . . . his breath was faint on . . . Alex's nostrils . . . and lips . . . Alex stretched and opened his eyes . . . Beauty was looking at him . . . propped on one elbow . . . check in his palm . . . Beauty spoke . . . scratch my head please Dulce . . . Alex was breathing normally now . . . propped against the bed head . . . Beauty's head in his lap . . . Beauty spoke . . . I wonder why I like to look at some things Dulce . . . things like smoke and cats . . . and you . . . Alex's pulse no longer hammered from... wrist to finger tip... wrist to finger tip... the rose dusk had become blue night... and soon... soon they would go out into the blue...

the little church was crowded... warm... the rows of benches were brown and sticky... Harold was there... and Constance and Langston and Bruce and John... there was Mr. Robeson... how are you Paul... a young man was singing... Caver... Caver was a very self assured young man... such a dream... poppies... black poppies... they were applauding... Constance and John were exchanging notes... the benches were sticky... a young lady was playing the piano... fair... and red calla lilies... who had ever heard of red calla lilies... they were applauding... a young man was playing the viola... what could it all mean... so many poppies... and Beauty looking at him like... like Monty looked at Zora... another young man was playing a violin... he was the first real artist to perform... he had a touch of soul... or was it only feeling... they were hard to differentiate on the violin... and Melva standing in the peggies and lilies... Mr. Phillips was singing... Mr. Phillips was billed as a basso... and he had kissed her... they were applauding... the first young man was singing again... Langston's spritua... Fyah-Fyah-Lawd... Fyah's gonna burn ma soul... Beauty's hair was so black and curly... they were applauding... encore... Fyah-Lawd had been a success... Langston bowed... Langston had written the music... Hall bowed... Hall had written the music... the young man was singing it again... Beauty's lips had pressed hard... cool... Fyah-Lawd... his breath had trembled... Fyah's gonna burn ma soul... they were all leaving... first to the roof dance... Fyah-Lawd... there was Catherine... she was beautiful tonight... she always was at night... Beauty's lips... Fyah-Lawd... hello Dot... why don't you take a boat that sails... when are you leaving again... and there's Estelle... every one was there... Fyah-Lawd... Beauty's body had pressed close... close... Fyah's gonna burn my soul... let's leave... have to meet some people at the New World... then to Augusta's party... Harold... John... Bruce... Connie... Langston... ready... down one hundred thirty-fifth street... Fyah... meet these people and leave... Fyah-Lawd... now to Augusta's party... Fyahs gonna burn ma soul... they were at Augusta's... Alex half lay... half sat on the floor... sipping a cocktail... such a dream... red calla lilies...

Alex left... down the narrow streets... Fyah... up the long noisy stairs... Fyahs gonna burn ma soul... his head felt swollen... expanding... contracting... expanding... contracting... he had never been like this before... expanding... contracting... it was that... Fyah... Fyah-Lawd... and the cocktail... and Beauty... he felt two cool strong hands on his shoulders... it was Beauty... he down Dulce... Alex lay down... Beauty... Alex stopped... no no... don't say it... Beauty mustn't know... Beauty couldn't understand... are you going to lie down too Beauty... the light went out expanding... contracting... he felt the bed sink as Beauty lay beside him... his lips were dry... hot... the palms of his hands so moist and cool... Alex partly closed his eyes... from beneath his lashes he could see Beauty's face over his... nearer... nearer... Beauty's hair touched his forehead now... he could feel his breath on his nostrils and lips... Beauty's breath came short... breathe normally Beauty... breathe normally... Beauty's lips touched his... pressed hard... cool... opened slightly... Alex opened his eyes... into Beauty's... parted his lips... Dulce... Beauty's breath was hot and short... Alex ran his hand through Beauty's hair... Beauty's lips pressed hard against his teeth... Alex trembled... could feel Beauty's body... close against his... hot... tense... white... and soft... soft... soft...

they were at Forno's... every one came to Forno's once maybe only once... but they came... see that big fat woman Beauty... Alex pointed to an overly stout and bejeweled lady making her way thru the maze of chairs... that's Maria Guerrero... Beauty looked to see a lady guiding almost the whole opera company to an immense table... really Dulce... for one who appreciates beauty you do use the most abominable English... Alex lit a cigarette... and that florid man with white hair... that's Carl... Beauty smiled... The Blind boy... he asked... Alex wondered... everything seemed to... so just the same... here they were laughing and joking about people... there's Rene... Rene this is my friend Adrian... after that night... and he felt so unembarrassed... Rene and Adrian were talking... there was Juiceta Bort... she was bowing at their table... oh her cousin was with them... and Peggy Joyce... every one came to Forno's... Alex looked toward the door... there was Melva... Alex beckoned... Melva this is Adrian... Beauty held her hand... they talked... smoked... Alex loved Melva... in

Forno's... every one came there sooner or later... maybe once... but... up... up... slow... jerk up... up... not fast... not glorious... but slow... up... up into the sun... slow... sure like fate... up... up into the sun... the brim of life... two shining rails straight down... Melva's head was on his shoulder... his arm was around her... pose... the down... gasping... straight down... straight like sin... down... the curving shiny rail rushed up to meet them... hit the bottom then... shoot up... fast... glorious... up into the sun... Melva gasped... Alex's arm tightened... all goes up... then down... straight like hell... all breath squeezed out of them... Melva's head on his shoulder... up... up... Alex kissed her... down... they stepped out of the car... walking music... now over to the Ferris Wheel... out and up... Melva's hand was soft in his... out and up... over mortals... mortals drinking nectar... five cents a glass... her cheek was soft on his... up... up... till the world seemed small... tiny... the ocean seemed tiny and blue... up... up... and out... over the sun... the tiny red sun... Alex kissed her... up... up... their tongues touched... up... seventh heaven... the sea had swallowed the sun... up and out... her breath was perfumed... Alex kissed her... drift down... soft... soft... the sun had left the sky flushed... drift down... soft down... back to earth... visit the mortals sipping nectar at five cents a glass... Melva's lips brushed his... then out among the mortals... and the sun had left a flush on Melva's cheeks... they walked hand in hand... and the moon came out... they walked in silence on the silver strip... and the sea sang for them... they walked toward the moon... we'll hang our hats on the crook of the moon Melva... softly on the silver strip... his hands molded her features and her cheeks were soft and warm to his touch... where is Adrian... Alex... Melva trod silver... Alex trod sand... Alex trod sand... the sea sang for her... Beauty... her hand felt cold in his... Beauty... the sea dimmed... Beauty... he led the way to the train... and the train dimmed... Beauty... dined... dined... her cheek had been soft... Beauty... Beauty... her breath had been perfumed... Beauty... Beauty... the sands had been silver... Beauty... Beauty... they left the train... Melva walked music... Melva said... don't make me blush again... and kissed him... Alex stood on the steps after she left him and the night was black... down long streets to... Alex lit a cigarette... and his heels clicked... Beauty... Melva... Beauty... Melva... and the smoke made the night blue... Melva had said... don't make me blush again... and kissed him... and the street had been blue... one can love two at the same time... Melva had kissed him... one can... and the street had been blue... one can... and the room was clouded with blue smoke... drifting vapors of smoke and thoughts... Beauty's hair was so black... and soft... blue smoke from an ivory holder... was that why he loved Beauty... one can... or because his body was beautiful... and white and warm... or because his eyes... one can love...

Richard Bruce... To Be Continued...

It was Sunday. Any other night, Delia Jones would have been in bed for two hours by this time. But she was a washwoman, and Monday morning meant a great deal to her. So she collected the soiled clothes on Saturday when she returned the clean things. Sunday night after church, she sorted them and put the white things to soak. It saved her almost a half day's start. A great hamper in the bedroom held the clothes that she brought home. It was so much neater than a number of bundles lying around.

She squatted in the kitchen floor beside the great pile of clothes, sorting them into small heaps according to color, and humming a song in a mournful key, but wondering through it all where Sykes, her husband, had gone with her horse and buckboard.

Just then something long, round, limp and black fell upon her shoulders and slithered to the floor beside her. A great terror took hold of her. It softened her knees and dried her mouth so that it was a full minute before she could cry out or move. Then she saw that it was the big bull whip her husband liked to carry when he drove.

She lifted her eyes to the door and saw him standing there bent over with laughter at her fright. She screamed at him.

"Sykes, what you throw dat whip on me like dat? You know it would skeer me—looks just like a snake, an' you knows how skeered Ah is of snakes."

"Course Ah knowed it! That's how come Ah done it." He slapped his leg with his hand and almost rolled on the ground in his mirth. "If you such a big fool dat you got to have a fit over a earth worm or a string, Ah don't keer how bad Ah skeer you."

"You aint got no business doing it. Gawd knows it's a sin. Some day Ah'm gointin drop dead from some of yo' foolishness. 'Nother things, where you been wid mah rig? Ah feeds dat pony. He aint fuh you to be drivin' wid no bull whip."

"You sho is one aggravatin' nigger woman!" he declared and stepped into the room. She resumed her work and did not answer him at once. "Ah done tole you time and again to keep them white folks clothes outa dis house."

He picked up the whip and glared down at her. Delia went on with her work. She went out into the yard and returned with a galvanized tub and sat it on the washbench. She saw that Sykes had kicked all of the clothes together again, and now stood in her way truculently, his whole manner hoping, praying, for an argument. But she walked calmly around him and commenced to re-sort the things.

"Next time, Ah'm gointer kick 'em outdoors," he threatened as he struck a match along the leg of his corduroy breeches.

Delia never looked up from her work, and her thin, stooped shoulders sagged further.

"Ah aint for no fuss 'nigh' Sykes. Ah just come from taking sacrament at the church house."

He snorted scornfully. "Yeah, you just come from de church house on a Sunday night, but heah you is gone to work on them clothes. You aint nothing but a hypocrite. One of them amen-corner Christians—sing, whoop, and shout, then come home and wash white folks clothes on the Sabbath."

He stepped roughly upon the whitest pile of things, kicking them helter-skelter as he crossed the room. His wife gave a little scream of dismay, and quickly gathered them together again.

"Sykes, you quit grindin' dirt into these clothes! How can Ah git through by Saturday if Ah don't start on Sunday?"

"Ah don't keer if you never git through. Anyhow, Ah done promised Gawd and a couple of other men, Ah aint gointer have it in mah house. Don't gimme no lip neither, else Ah'll throw 'em out and put mah fist up side yo' head to boot."

Delia's habitual meekness seemed to slip from her shoulders like a blown scarf. She was on her feet; her poor little body, her bare knuckly hands bravely defying the strapping hulk before her.

"Looka heah, Sykes, you done gone too fur. Ah been married to you fur fifteen years, and Ah been takin' in washin' fur fifteen years. Sweat, sweat, sweat! Work and sweat, cry and sweat, pray and sweat!"

"What's dat got to do with me?" he asked brutally.

"What's it got to do with you, Sykes? Mah tub of suds is filled yo' belly with vittes more times than yo' hands is filled it. Mah sweat is done paid for this house and Ah reckon Ah kin keep on sweatin' in it."

She seized the iron skillet from the stove and struck a defensive pose, which act surprised him greatly, coming from her. It covered him and he did not strike her as he usually did.

"Now you won't," she panted, "that ole snaggle-toothed black woman you runnin' with aint comin' paid for nothin' on this place, and Ah'm gointer stay right heah till Ah'm toled out foot foremost."

"Well, you better quit gittin' me riled up, else they'll be robin' you out sooner than you expect. Ah'm so tired of you Ah don't know what to do. Gawd! how Ah hates skinny wimmen!"

A little awed by this new Delia, he sidled out of the door and slammed the back gate after him. He did not say where he had gone, but she knew too well. She knew very well that he would not return until nearly daybreak also. Her work over, she went on to bed but not to sleep at once. Things had come to a pretty pass!

She lay awake, gazing upon the debris that cluttered their matrimonial trail. Not an image left remaining along the way. Anything like flowers had long ago been drowned in the salty stream that had been pressed from her heart. Her tears, her sweat, her blood. She had brought love to the union and he had brought a longing after the flesh. Two months after the wedding, he had given her the first brutal beating. She had the memory of his numerous trips to Orlando with all of his wages when he had returned to her penniless, even before the first year had passed. She was young and soft then, but now she thought of her knotty, muscled limbs, her harsh knuckly hands, and drew herself up into an unhappy little ball in the middle of the big feather bed. Too late now to hope for love, even if it were not Bertha; it would be someone else. This case differed from the others only in that she was bolder than the others. Too late for everything except her little home. She had built it for her old days, and planned one by one the trees and flowers there. It was lovely to her, lovely.

Somehow, before sleep came, she found herself saying aloud: "Oh well, whatever goes over the Devil's back, is got to come under his belly. Some time or nuther, Sykes, like everybody else, is gointer reap his sowing." After that she was able to build a spiritual earthworks against her husband. His shells could no longer reach her. Amen. She went to sleep and sleep until he announced his presence in bed by kicking her feet and rudely snatching the cover away.

"Gimme some kivaah heah, an' git yo' damn foots over on yo' own side! Ah oughter mash you in yo' mouf fuh drawing dat skillet on me."

Delia went clear to the rail without answering him. A triumphant indifference to all that he was or did.

The week was as full of work for Delia as all other weeks, and Saturday found her behind her little pony, collecting and delivering clothes.

It was a hot, hot day near the end of July. The village men on Joe Clarke's porch even chewed cane listlessly. They did not hurt the cane-knots as usual. They let them dribble over the edge of the porch. Even conversation had collapsed under the heat.

"Hech come Delia Jones," Jim Merchant said, as the shaggy pony came round the bend of the road toward them. The rusty backboard was heaped with baskets of crisp, clean laundry.

"Yep," Joe Lindsay agreed. "Hot or col', rain or shine, jes ez reglar ez de weeks roll round' Delia carries 'em an' fetches 'em on Saturday."

"She better if she want'er eat," said Moss. "Syke Jones aint wuh de shot an' powder hit would tek tuh kill 'em. Not to huh he aint."

"He sho' aint," Walter Thomas chimed in. "It's too bad, too, cause she wuz a right pritty lil' trick when he got hah. Ah'd uh mah'ed hah mah-self if he hadnter beat me to it."

Delia nodded briefly at the men as she drove past. "Too much knockin' will ruin any 'oman. He done beat hah' tough tuh kill three women, let 'em change they' looks," said Elijah Mosesly. "How Syke kin stommuck dat big black greasy Mlogal he's layin' 'round' wid, gits me. Ah swear dat eight-rock couldn't kiss a sardine can Ah done throwed out de back do' 'way las' year."

"Aw, she's fat, thass how come. He's allus been crazy 'bout fat women," put in Merchant. "He'd a' been tied up wid one long time ago if he could a' found one tuh have him. Did' Ah tell yuh 'bout him come sittin' 'round' mah wife—bringin' her a basket uh pec-cans outa his yard tuh a present? Yes-sir, mah wife! She tol' him tuh take 'em right straight back home, cause Delia works so hard ovahn dat washrub she reckon everything on de place taste lak sweat an' soapuds. Ah jus' wish Ah'd a' caught 'im 'round' dere! Ah'd a' made his hips ketch on fah down dat shell road."

"Ah know he done it, too. Ah sees 'im grinnin' at every 'oman dat passes." Walter Thomas said. "But even so, he useter eat some mighty big hunks uh hunnible pie tuh git dat lil' 'oman he got. She wuz ez pritty ez a speckled pup! Dat wuz fifteen years ago. He useter be so skeered uh losin' hah, she could make him do some parts of a husband's duty. Dey never wuz de same in de mind."

"There oughter be a law about him," said Linda. "He aint at tub every gits tub a bear."

Clarke spoke for the first time. "Taint no law on earth dat kin make a man be decent if it aint in 'im. There's plenty men dat takes a wife lak dey do a joint uh sugar-cane. It's round, juicy an' sweet when dey gits it. But dey squeeze an' grind, squeeze an' grind an' wing tell dey wing every drop uh pleasure dat's in 'em out. When dey's satisfied dat dey is wingin' dey, dey treats 'em jes lak dey do a cane-crow. Dey throws 'em away. Dey knows what dey is doin' while dey is at it an' hates themselves tub it but they keeps on hangin' after hah tell she's empty. Den dey hates hah tub beat' a cane-chew an' in de way."

"We oughter take Sike an' dat stray 'oman uh his'n down in Lake Howell swamp an' lay on de rawhide till they can't say 'Lawsd a 'nussy.' He allus wuz uh overbearing niggah, but since dat white 'oman from up north done teacht 'im how to run a automobile, he done got to bigger'y to live—an' we oughter kill 'im." Old Man Anderson advised.

A grant of approval went around the porch. But the heat was melting their civic virtue and Elijah Moseley began to bait Joe Clarke.

"Come on, Joe, get a melon outa dere an' slice it up for yo' customers. We's all sufferin' 'ud de heat. De bear's done got me?"

"Thass right, Joe, a watermelon is jes' what Ah needs tuh cure de opprudicks." Walter Thomas joined forces with Moseley. "Come on dere, Joe. We all is steady customers an' you aint set us up in a long time. Ah chooses dat long, knowledgeable Florida favorite."

"A god, an' be dough. You all gimme twenty cents and slice away," Clarke retorted. "Ah needs a col' slice m'self. Hah, everybody chip in. Ah'll lend y'all mah meaz knife."

The money was quickly subscribed and the huge melon brought forth. At that moment, Sykes and Bertha arrived. A determined silence fell on the porch and the melon was put away again.

Mercant snapped down the blade of his jack-knife and moved toward the store door.

"Come on in, Joe, an' gimme a slab uh sow belly an' uh pound uh coffee—almost fudgert 'rass Saturday. Got to get on home." Most of the men left also.

Just then Delia drove past on her way home, as Sykes was ordering magnanimously for Bertha. It pleased him for Delia to see.

"Get whasover yo' heart desires, Homer. Wait a minute, Joe. Gave hah two bottles uh strawberry soda-water, uh quart uh parched ground-peas, an' a black uh clewint gum."

With all this that left the store, with Sykes reminding Bertha that this was his town and she could have it if she wanted it.

The men returned soon after they left, and held their watermelon feast.

"Where did Sike James git dat 'oman from no-how?" Lindsay asked.

"Yuh! Ahpoka. Guess dey musta been cleanin' out de town when she left. She don't look lak a thing but a hawk uh liver wid hair on it."

"Well, she sho' kin squall!" Dave Carter contributed. "When she gits ready tuh laff, she jes' opens mah mouth an' latches it back tuh de las notch. No ole grandpa alligator down in Lake Bell aint't got nothin' on hah."

Bertha had been in town three months now, Sikes was still paying her room rent at Delia Lewis's—the only house in town that would have taken her in. Sikes took her frequently to Winter Park to "snoops." He still assured her that he was the swiftest man in the state.

"Sho' you kin have dat lil' ole house soon's Ah kin git dat 'oman outa dere. Everythin' blongs tuh me an' you sho' kin have it. Ah sho' 'bommates uh skinnin' 'oman. Lawsd, you sho' is got one portly shape on you! You kin git anything you wants. Dis is mah town an' you sho' kin have it."

Delia's work-worn knees crawled over the earth in Gettysburg and up the rocks of Calvary many, many times during these months. She avoided the villagers and meeting places in her efforts to be blind and deaf. But Bertha nullified this to a degree, by coming to Delia's house to call Sikes out to her at the gate.

Delia and Sikes fought all the time now with no peaceful interludes. They slept and ate in silence. Two or three times Delia had attempted a timid friendliness, but she was repulsed each time. It was plain that the breaches must remain agape.

The sun had burned July to August. The heat streamed down like a million hot arrows, smiting all things living upon the earth. Grass withered, leaves browned, snakes went blind in shedding and men and dogs went mad. Dog days!

Delia came home one day and found Sikes there before her. She wondered, but started to go on into the house without speaking, even though he was standing in the kitchen door and she must either stoop under his arm or ask him to move. He made no room for her. She noticed a soap box beside the steps, but paid no particular attention to it, knowing that he must have brought it there. As she was stooping to pass under his overreached arm, he suddenly pushed her backward, laughingly.

"Look in de box dere Delia, Ah done bringin' yuh somethin'!"

She nearly fell upon the box in her stumbling, and when she saw what it held, she all but fainted outright.

"Sike! Sike, mah Gawd! You take dat rattlesnake way from heah! You gortrah. Oh, Jesus, hah nussy!"

"Ah aint got tuh do nothin' but die. Taint no use uh you puttin' on airs makin' out lak you skeered uh dat snake—he's gortner stay right heah till he die. He wouldn't bite me cause Ah knows how tuh handle 'im. Nohow he wouldn't risk breakin' out his fangs 'gin yo' skinnin' tags."

"Now, now Sike, don't keep dat thing 'roun' heah tuh skeer me tuh death. You knows Ah'm even feared uh earth worms. Thass de biggest snake Ah evah did see. Kill 'im Sike, please."

"Doan ast me tuh do nothin' tuh yuh. Goin' 'roun' tryin' tuh be so damn asperpitious. Naw, Ah aint gonna kill it. Ah think uh damn sight mo' uh hah dan you! Dat's a nice snake an' anybody daan lak 'im kin jes' hit de gric."

The village soon heard that Sikes had the snake, and came to see and ask questions.

"How de hen-fire did you ketch dat six-foot rattler, Sike?" Thomas asked.

"He's full uh frogs so he caint hardly move, thass how Ah cased up on 'em. But Ah'm a snake charmer an' knows how tuh handle 'em. Shux, dat aint nothin'. Ah could ketch one every day if Ah so wanted tuh."

"What he needs is a heavy hick'ry club leaned real heavy on his head. Dat's de bes way tuh charm a rattlesnake."

"Naw, Walt, y'll jes' don't understand dese diamon backs lak Ah do," said Sikes in a superior tone of voice.

The village agreed with Walter, but the snake stayed on. His box remained by the kitchen door with its screen wire covering. Two or three days later it had digested its meal of frogs and literally came to life. It rattled at every movement in the kitchen or the yard. One day as Delia came down the kitchen steps she saw his chalk-white fangs curved like scimitars hung in the wire meshes. This time she did not run away with averted eyes as usual. She stood for a long time in the doorway in a real fury that grew bloodier for every second that she regarded the creature that was her torment.

That night she broughed the subject as soon as Sikes sat down to the table.

"Sike, Ah wants you tuh take dat snake 'way fum heah. You done starved me an' Ah put up widder, you done beat me an' Ah took dat, but you done kill all mah insides bringin' dat varmint heah."

Sikes poured out a saucer full of coffee and drank it deliberately before he answered her.

"A whole lot Ah keer 'bout how you feels inside uh out. Dat snake aint goin' no damn weach till Ah gits ready tuh 'im tuh go. So far as beatin' is concerned, yuh aint took near all dat you gortner take et yuh stay 'roun' me."

Delia pushed back her plate and got up from the table. "Ah hates you, Sikes," she said calmly. "Ah hates you tuh de same degree dat Ah useter love uh you. Ah done took an' took till mah belly is full up tuh mah neck. Dat's de reason Ah got mah letter fum de church an' moved mah membership tuh Woodbridge—so Ah don't hah tuh take no sacrament wid yuh. Ah don't wantuh see yuh 'roun' me at all. Lay 'roun' wid dat 'oman all yuh wants tuh but gwan way fum me an' mah house. Ah hates yuh lak uh suck-egg dog."

Sikes almost let the huge wad of corn bread and collard greens he was chewing fall out of his mouth in amazement. He had a hard time whipping himself up to the proper fury to try to answer Delia.

"Well, Ah'm glad you does hate me. Ah'm sho' tribbed uh you hangin' outah me. Ah don't want yuh. Look at yuh strongy ole neck! Yo' rawbony tags an' arms is enough tuh cut uh man tuh death. You looks jes' lak de devral's doll-baby tuh me. You caint hate me no worse dan Ah hates you. Ah been hain' you tuh years."

"Yo' ole black hide don't look lak nothin' tuh me, but uh passle uh wrinkled up rubber, wid yo' big ole veins flapin' on each side lak up path uh buzzard wings. Don't think Ah'm gainin' be run way fum mah house neiter. Ah'm goin' tuh de white folks bout you, mah young man, de very next time you lay yo' hant's on me. Meh cup is done run ovah." Delia said this with no signs of fear, and Sikes departed from the house, threatening her, but made not the slightest move to carry out any of them.

That night he did not return at all, and the next day being Sunday, Delia was glad that she did not have to quarrel before she hitched up her new and drove the four miles to Woodbridge.

She stayed to the night service—"love feast"—which was very warm and full of spirit. In the emotional winds her domestic trials were borne far and wide so that she sang as she drove homeward.

"Jarden water, black an' col"

Chills de body, not de soul

An' Ah wannah cross Jarden in uh calm time."

She came from the barn to the kitchen door and stopped.

"Whut's de match, ol' saram, you aint kickin' up yo' racket?" She addressed the snake's box. Complete silence. She went on into the house with a new hope in its birth struggles. Perhaps her threat to go to the white folks had frightened Sykes! Perhaps he was sorry! Fifteen years of misery and suppression had brought Delia to the place where she would hope anything that looked towards a way over or through her wall of inhibitions.

She felt in the match safe behind the stove at once for a match. There was only one there.

"Dat nagan wouldn't fetch nothin' hean tuh save his rotten neck, but he kin run thew what Ah brings quick enough. Now he done tore'd off nigh on tuh half uh box uh matches. He done had dat 'oman hean in mah house, too."

Nobody but a woman could tell how she knew this even before she struck the match. But she did and it put her into a new fury.

Presently she brought in the tubs to put the white things to soak. This time she decided she need not bring the hamper out of the bedroom; she would go in there and do the sorting. She picked up the pot-bellied lamp and went in. The room was small and the hamper stood hard by the foot of the white iron bed. She could sit and reach through the bedposts—reaching as she worked.

"Ah wannah cross Jarden in uh calm time." She was singing again. The mood of the "love feast" had returned. She threw back the lid of the basket almost gaily. Then, moved by both horror and terror, he spring back toward the door. There lay the snake in the basket! He moved sluggishly at first, but even as she turned round and round, jumped up and down in an insanity of fear, he began to stir vigorously. She saw him pouring his awful beauty from the basket upon the bed, then she seized the lamp and ran as fast as she could to the kitchen. The wind from the open door blew out the light and the darkness added to her terror. She sped to the darkness of the yard, slamming the door after her before she thought to set down the lamp. She did not feel safe even on the ground, so she climbed up in the hay barn.

There for an hour or more she lay sprawled upon the hay a gibbering wreck.

Finally she grew quiet, and after that, coherent thought. With this, stalked through her a cold, bloody rage. Hours of this. A period of introspection, a space of retrospection, then a mixture of both. Out of this an awful calm.

"Well, Ah done de bes' Ah could. If things aint right, Gawd knows tant mah fault."

She went to sleep—a twitthy sleep—and woke up to a faint gray sky. There was a loud hollow sound below. She peered out. Sykes was at the wood-pile, demolishing a wire-covered box.

He hurried to the kitchen door, but hung outside there some minutes before he entered, and stood some minutes more inside before he closed it after him.

The gray in the sky was spreading. Delia descended without fear now, and crouched beneath the low bedroom window. The drawn shade shut out the dawn, shut in the night. But the thin walls held back no sound.

"Dat ol' scratch is woke up now!" She mused at the tremendous whirr inside, which every woodsman knows, is one of the sound illusions. The ratter is a ventriloquist. His whirr sounds to the right, to the left, straight ahead, behind, close under foot—everywhere but where it is. Woe to him who guesses wrong unless he is prepared to hold up his end of the argument! Sometimes he strikes without rattling at all.

Inside, Sykes heard nothing until he knocked a pot lid off the stove while trying to reach the match safe in the dark. He had emptied his pockets at Bertha's.

"The snake seemed to wake up under the stove and Sykes made a quick leap into the bedroom. In spite of the gin he had had, his head was clearing now."

"Mah Gawd!" he chattered, "of Ah could only strack uh light!"

The rattling ceased for a moment as he stood paralyzed. He waited. It seemed that the snake waited also.

"Oh, tuh de light! Ah thought he'd be too sick"—Sykes was muttering to himself when the whirr began again, closer, right underfoot this time. Long before this, Sykes' ability to think had been flattened down to primitive instinct and he leaped—onto the bed.

Outside Delia heard a cry that might have come from a maddened chimpanzee, a stricken gorilla. All the terror, all the horror, all the rage that man possibly could express, without a recognizable human sound.

A tremendous stir inside there, another series of animal screams, the intermittent whirr of the reptile. The shade torn violently down from the window, letting in the red dawn, a huge brown hand seizing the window stick, great dull blows upon the wooden floor punctuating the gibberish of sound long after the rattle of the snake had abruptly subsided. All this Delia could see and hear from her place beneath the window, and it made her ill. She crept over to the four-o'clocks and stretched herself on the cool earth to recover.

She lay there. "Delia, Delia!" She could hear Sykes calling in a most despairing tone as one who expected no answer. The sun crept on up, and he called. Delia could not move—her legs were gone flabby. She never moved, he called, and the sun kept rising.

"Mah Gawd!" She heard him moan, "Mah Gawd fum Heben!" She heard him stumbling about and got up from her flower-bed. The sun was growing warm. As she approached the door she heard him call out hopefully, "Delia, is dat you Ah hean?"

She saw him on his hands and knees as soon as she reached the door. He crept an inch or two toward her—all that he was able, and she saw his horribly swollen neck and is one open eye shining with hope. A surge of pity too strong to support bore her away from that eye that must, could not, fail to see the tubs. He would see the lamp. Orlando with its doctors was too far. She could scarcely reach the Chinaberry tree, where she waited in the growing heat while inside she knew the cold river was creeping up and up to extinguish that eye which must know by now that she knew.

ZONA NEALE HURSTON.

Intelligentia

*I*f all the doughty societies that have sprung up in this age of Kluxers and Beavers the one known by that unpronounceable word, "Intelligentia," is among the most benighted. The war seems to have given it birth, the press nurtured it, which should have been warning enough, then the public accepted it, and now we all suffer.

Of course no one would admit that he is a member of the Intelligentia. Modern civilizing influences do not develop that kind of candor. But it is just as easy to spot a member of the genus as it is to spot a Mississippian or a Chinese: the marks are all there.

According to the ultra-advanced notions of the great majority of this secret order if it were not for the Intelligentia this crippled old world would be compelled to kick up its toes and die on the spot. Were it not for these super-men all the brilliance of the ages and the inheritance which is so vital to the maintenance of the spark of progress would vanish and pass away. In other words if the Intelligentia were to stick their divinely appointed noses a little higher into the ethereal regions and withdraw themselves completely from the tawdry field of life that field would soon become a burial ground for the rest of humanity.

This is the rankest folly. The world owes about as much to the rank and file of this society as a Negro slave owes to Georgia. Besides a few big words added to the lexicon and one or two fifteenth century notions about the way the world should be run, the contribution of Intelligentia to society is as negligible as gin at a Methodist picnic. This is not to discount the many notable contributions by really intelligent men and women who didn't know that such a society existed until insignificant mincomps with their eyes set towards enhancing their own positions in society, made them honorary members.

What is intelligentia anyway? If you ask a member of the Intelligentia he will probably sneer at you and ask who wants to know. The Intelligentia are very particular about observing the admonition against putting a herd of swine on an oyster diet, so particular in fact that they have become much more adept at discovering pigpens than they are at digging pearls. But if you ask a truly intelligent person he will tell you in a jiffy that intelligentia is simply the ability to solve a new problem, nothing more, nothing less.

Now that is just what the average member of the Intelligentia does not do. He does not solve new problems, he makes them; then he leaves it to the true intellectuals to solve them. Sift the chaff out of Intelligentia and you will find that the residuum is about fifty-six one hundredths of one per cent. For the rest, the society is made up of non-producers and bloodsuckers who feed voraciously on the bones which the true intellectuals pass on to them to pick over.

The average member of Intelligentia comes as near being a true intellectual as the proverbial hot water in which resides a cabbage leaf comes to being stew. His remarks are abundant information about the most recent literature, an obsession for the latest shows, wild notions about art in general, along with a flair for disdaining Babbitts, and for feigning spiritual chumminess with the true intellectuals who are accomplishing things.

He reads H. L. M. and George Jean Nathan, knows his Freud from cover to cover, and has an ability for spotting motrons which is positively as uncanary as the ability of a Texas bloodhound to sniff a nigger. If he's a man he is as incapable of attending to his own affairs and doing something once in a while, as a hobo is incapable of paying a month's rent. All this goes for the feminine Intelligentia, with this added distinction—they sneer at every homely virtue, including taking care of babies and frying eggs without breaking the yolks.

Far be it from me to sing praises to the days when men amused themselves with dominoes and the fair sex waded through enough dishwater to make a Jordan. Those days and their folk hold no illusions for me. But it is high time that a halt is called on these snobbish sycophantish highbrow hero-worshippers who, having got a smattering of wisdom from one of the fifty-seven hundred purveyors of this rare article in America, degan to damn with their sneers and jibes any activity, institution, or moral it strikes their fancy to treat in such a manner.

These are the folk who talk Bolshevism in their parlors and wouldn't go to Russia if it were placed like milk for cats, in saucers on their doorstep. They slur Beethoven or Tenyson and extol Stravinsky and Whitman when they are hardly able to grasp such simple minded folk as Laybush or Longfellow, or even Eddie Guest himself.

They mull over best sellers and can call authors' names by the scores. Literature for them is measured by its mystic qualities or its pornographical settings; music by its aberrations from generally accepted forms; art by its illuvseness.

Anything that is plain or clear or clean comes under the suspicion of these folk if not actually beneath their contempt. They who themselves do almost nothing by way of contributing to the nation's artistic development set themselves up as the struggling workman's severest critics. Ofttimes they are actually proud of their non-accomplishment: it shows their artistic temperament, they boast. Good God deliver us from their art!

One can admire truly intellectual types like Sinclair Lewis, Dreiser, H.L.M., and Shaw, men who are in every respect creative critics and thinkers. What one cannot swallow is this carrion prostrated at the altar of Liberalism when as a matter of fact their lying hearts are as faint as they are insipid. Their pets are as many as Main Streeters and their sentiments as hypocritical as those of the most pious Kluxer in the Bible Belt. They are by far more to be despised than the "motrons" whom they single out with such avidity; for the latter do at least make an attempt to earn their salt, and to express themselves honestly, while the Intelligentia steal all they can get away with and never do anything unless it be in the attitude of a dethroned prince who suddenly has to go to work.

These folk have no more right to become associated with true artistic spirits than Knights of Columbus have to drink the Grand Kleagle's health. They simply give art and artists a black eye with their snobbery and stupidity; and their false interpretations and hypocritical evaluations do more to heighten suspicion against the real artist on the part of the ordinary citizen than perhaps any other single factor in the clash of art and provincialism.

Certainly there is more excuse for innocent idiosyncrasy and moronism than there is for the sophisticated bigotry of these fair folk who, in the secret recesses of their inner consciousness, lay claim to membership in the Intelligentia.

ARTHUR HURFF FAUSER.

Fire Burns A Department of Comment

Some time ago, while reviewing Carl Van Vechten's Java lamed Nigger Heaven I made the prophecy that Harlem Negroes, once their aversion to the "nigger" in the title was forgotten, would erect a statue on the corner of 135th Street and Seventh Avenue, and dedicate it to this ultra-sophisticated Iowa New Yorker.

So far my prophecy has failed to pan out, and superficially it seems as if it never will, for instead of being enshrined for his pseudo-sophisticated, semi-serious, semi-ludicrous effusion about Harlem, Mr. Van Vechten is about to be lynched, at least in chry.

Yet I am loathe to retract or to temper my first prophecy. Human nature is too perverse and prophetic do not necessarily have to be fulfilled within a generation. Rather, they can either be fulfilled or else belied with startling two-facedness throughout a series of generations, which, of course, creates the possibility that the fulfillments may outnumber the belittlements and thus gain credence for the prophecy with posterity. Witness the Bible.

However, in defending my prophecy I do not wish to endow Mr. Van Vechten's novel (?) with immortality, but there is no real reason why Nigger Heaven should not eventually be as stupidly acclaimed as it is now being stupidly damned by the majority of Harlem's dark inhabitants. Thus I defiantly reiterate that a few years hence Mr. Van Vechten will be spoken of as a kindly gent rather than as a moral leper exploiting people who had believed him to be a sincere friend.

I for one, and strange as it may sound, there are others, who believe that Carl Van Vechten was rendered sincere during his explorations and observations of Negro life in Harlem, even if he remained characteristically superficial. Superficiality does not necessarily denote a lack of sincerity, and even superficiality may occasionally delve into deep pots of raw life. What matter if they be flesh pots?

In writing Nigger Heaven the author wavered between sentimentality and sophistication. That the sentimentality won out is his funeral. That the sophistication stung certain Negroes to the quick is their funeral.

The odds are about even. Harlem cabarets have received another public boost and are wearing out cash register keys, and entertainers' throats and orchestra instruments. The so-called Intelligentia of Harlem has exposed its inherent stupidity. And Nigger Heaven is a best seller.

Group criticism of current writings, morals, life, politics, or religion is always ridiculous, but what could be more ridiculous than the wholesale condemnation of a book which only one-tenth of the condemnators have or will read. And even if the book was as vile, as degrading, and as defamatory to the character of the Harlem Negro as the Harlem Negro now declares, his criticisms would not be considered valid by an intelligent person as long as the critic had had no reading contact with the book.

The objectors to Nigger Heaven claim that the author came to Harlem, ingratiated himself with Harlem folk, and then with a supercilious grin and a salacious smirk, lolled at his desk downtown and dashed off a pornographic document about upown in which all of the Negro characters are pictured as being debased, lecherous creatures not at all characteristic or true to type, and that, moreover, the author provokes the impression that all of Harlem's inhabitants are cabaret hounds and thirtynine neurotics. He did not tell, say his critics, of our well bred, well behaved church-going majorties, nor of our night schools filled with eager elders, nor of our brilliant college youth being trained in the approved contemporary manner, nor of our quiet, home loving thousands who hardly know what the word cabaret connotes. He told only of lurid night life and of uninhibited sybarites. Therefore, since he has done these things and neglected to do these others the white people who read the book will believe that all Harlem Negroes are like the Byrons, the Lascaes, the Pettijohns, the Rubys, the Creepers, the Bonifaces, and the other level huskies and whoremongers in the book.

It is obvious that those excited folk do not realize that any white person who would believe such poppy-cock probably believes it anyway, without any additional aid from Mr. Van Vechten, and should such a person read a tale about our so-called cabaret, church-going Negroes, presented in all their virtue and glory and with their human traits, their human hypocrisy and their human perversities glossed over, written, say, by Jessie Fauser, said person would laugh derisively and allege that Miss Fauser had not told the truth, the same as Harlem

Negroes are alleging that Carl Van Vechten has not told the truth. It really makes no difference to the race's welfare what such ignoramuses think, and it would seem that any author preparing to write about Negroes in Harlem or anywhere else (for I hear that DuBois Heyward has been roundly denounced by Charlestonian Negroes for his beautiful Forays) should take whatever phases of their life that seem the most interesting to him, and develop them as he pleases. Why Negroes imagine that any writer is going to write what Negroes think he ought to write about them is too ridiculous to merit consideration. It would seem that they would shy away from being pigeon-holed so long have they been the rather lamentable victims of such a typically American practice, yet Negroes would have all Negroes appearing in contemporary literature made as ridiculous and as false to type as the older school of pseudo-humorous, sentimental white writers made their Uncle Toms, their Topsy's, and their Mammys, or as the Octavius Roy Cohen school now make their more modern "cultid" folk.

One young lady, prominent in Harlem college circles, spoke forth in a public forum (oh yes, they even have public forums where they spend their time announcing that they have not read the book, and that the author is a moral leper who also commits literary sins), that there was only one character in Nigger Heaven who was true to type. This character, the unwitting damsel went on, was Mary Love. It seems as if all the younger Negro women in Harlem are prototypes of this Mary Love, and it is pure, poor, virtuous, vapid Mary, to whom they point as a typical life model.

Again there has been no realization that Mary Love is the least life-like character in the book, or that it is she who suffers most from her creator's newly acquired seriousness and sentimentality, she who suffers most of the whole ensemble because her creator discovered, in his talented trippings around Manhattan, drama at which he could not chuckle while his cavalier pen sped cleverly on in the same old way yet did not—could not spank.

But—had all the other characters in Nigger Heaven approximated Mary's standard, the statue to Carl Van Vechten would be an actualized instead of a deferred possibility, and my prophecy would be gloriously fulfilled instead of being ignominiously belied.

WALLACE THURMAN.

THE FIRE!! PRESS

OPPORTUNITY Journal of Negro Life

"On behalf of my publishers, I ask your formal permission to reprint the following story in The Best Short Stories of 1926: 'Symphoniesque,' by Arthur Huff Fauset. OPPORTUNITY, June 1926."

EDWARD J. O'BRIEN, London, England
Editor, Best Short Stories

"The brilliant Negro journal, OPPORTUNITY."

DU BOIS HEYWARD, Author of Forays

"This latest number of OPPORTUNITY is fine. Don't forget me on those back numbers."

CARL SANDBURGH, Poet,
Author, Chicago Poems, Smoke and Steel,
and Abraham Lincoln.

"You are now giving us the best magazine we have."

BENJAMIN BRANTLEY

"We have decided to give to last year's class a subscription to some good Negro Magazine. The class voted unanimously for the OPPORTUNITY Magazine."

C. H. HAPER, Dean,
Tennessee Agricultural and Industrial
State College, Nashville, Tenn.

OPPORTUNITY

Is Published By

The National Urban League
127 East 23rd St., New York City

ERIC WALDROND
Business Manager

CHARLES S. JOHNSON
Editor

COUNTY P. CULLIEN
Assistant Editor